Pay stub of an undocumented worker in Fresno County. The worker will never see any Social Security. The labor contractor charges $77.50 for bad food and unsanitary housing and deducts $20 for the cost of smuggling the worker into the U.S. The total smuggling fee is usually $250-$400.

Thirteen years ago, in April, 1962, Cesar Chavez, Helen his wife, and their eight children moved into a two-bedroom house on Kensington Street, Delano. At approximately the same time, the AFL-CIO decided to strengthen its drive to organize farm workers and dispatched fresh organizers to several locations in the state. The California Migrant Ministry, now known as the National Farm Worker Ministry, took the historic step of placing staff in the fields along side union organizers. And, in the deep South, a campaign to liberate Black Americans was raging.

Between 1962 and September, 1965, the fledgling National Farm Worker Association, formed by Cesar and a handful of determined organizers, grew to several thousand members. A credit union, the first for migrant farm workers, an automotive cooperative, a newspaper, service center, and death benefit insurance plan were established. . . all without foundation or government grants, depending solely upon the will of the farm worker union members for support.

But in that incredible September of 1965, four mighty streams — the NFWA, the religious, civil rights and labor movements converged to support what is now known as the Great Delano Grape Strike.

Members of the predominantly Filipino AFL-CIO and the Chicano NFWA formed a joint strike committee dedicated to bringing the powerful table grape growers of California to the bargaining table. Their strike was met by sheriff's deputies at riot alert, dogs, private police, guns, helicopter patrols, and of course strike-breakers recruited by labor contractors. The American Farm Bureau, the Chamber of Commerce, John Birch Society, and later the Nixon-Reagan Axis, joined hands in an alliance of Right-Might, determined to crush the farm workers' movement. The United Auto Workers, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, and other independent labor organizations threw their weight behind La Causa. And even then, the battle, as in so many in the agricultural fields before, looked hopeless.

Then a new tactic was tried. In spite of those who said it wouldn't work, a consumer boycott of table grapes was launched. Student volunteers and farm workers literally rode the rails and hitch hiked to distant cities to ask the public not to buy grapes. Through a sacrifice rarely exceeded in the history of the American Labor Movement, workers from the lush vineyards fanned out across the entire world. Like a fist slowly closing, the grip on grower profits tightened, until, in the summer of 1970, table grape growers from Coachella to Chowchilla trooped up to the bargaining table and made their peace with the new farm workers union, now called United Farm Workers, AFL-CIO.

Meanwhile, other skirmishes were fought and won: Gallo, Almaden, Christian Brothers, Novitiate, Franzia, Perelli-Minetti, Schenley, and Italian Swiss Colony felt the sting of the strike and boycott, fought back, and finally signed contracts with the union. Thus, almost 60,000 migrant farm workers covered by union contracts saw their labor respected, their wages raised from 90 cents to $2.50 per hour, their health protected by a medical plan, and their lives lengthened by protections against deadly organo-phosphate pesticides in the fields. For a while it seemed that the dreadful statistic quoted by the U.S. Department of Labor, that farm workers enjoy a life expectancy of only 49 years, would be erased and forgotten. Victorious and exhausted, farm worker organizers returned to their homes to begin to enjoy the fruits of the long struggle. But barely before the ink was dry on the grape contracts, signed in the summer of 1970, the International Brotherhood of Teamsters announced a campaign to wipe out the momentum of the UFW by signing contracts with all the lettuce growers in the Salinas Valley. Outraged, UFW members in the lettuce fields carried out the largest and most effective agricultural strike in the history of the United States.

In a matter of days, however, the picketing was prohibited by the growers' traditional friends, the medieval-minded, black-robed rural judges. Undaunted, the union pressed forward with a boycott of head lettuce, which continues to this day.

Meanwhile, labor peace settled over the vineyards. Even the hated labor contractors, with their man-slaughtering buses, were driven from the fields and replaced by hiring halls. In 1972, just ten years after Cesar, Helen and family had moved to Delano, the number of migrant children graduating from high school had risen 700%. Farm workers were settling down, participating in local politics, and enjoying long-sought stability.

Then, on April 16, 1973, these table grape contracts expired in Coachella Valley. The outlook was not good for renewal. In fact, labor leaders, churchmen, and journalists were appalled to hear of the incredible alliance announced by Teamster International President, Frank Fitzsimmons at the annual convention of the American Farm Bureau. But there it was, out in the open, a blatant conspiracy between these two giants to destroy the United Farm Workers. In the face of appeals for reason from the National Conference of Bishops, the wedding took place. The Teamsters and the Growers honeymooned, and gave birth to a scrap of paper they named a contract.

Again, as in the lettuce dispute, the outraged farm workers struck with all their might. Again, the courts came to the defense of the agri-business Giants. And this time, in Kern County, the full force of the Sheriff's Department was thrown into the battle on the side of the Growers and Teamsters.

Over four thousand farm worker strikers were arrested for refusing to obey unconstitutional injunctions. Hundreds were gassed and beaten. Two were killed.

The Gallo Wine Company and the table grape growers have all signed contracts with the Teamster without permitting their workers the simple dignity of casting a vote for the union of their choice. Farm workers have been robbed of their union contracts and today are in slavery. They must pay dues to Frank Fitzsimmon's union against their will, or be fired.

And so, Gallo, grape and lettuce strikers are boycotting again.

They are fighting for their lives.

Fight beside them.

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR

TOM BRADLEY
MAYOR

To the United Farm Workers of America:

All of my life, I have fought, by every legal means, the indignities and deprivations visited on blacks, browns and other minorities and subjugated peoples. I am continuing that fight and expect to carry it on until every human being has the full dignity and respect, and all the rights, to which each of us is entitled. I therefore believe that your struggle is mine. It is nothing more, nor less, than the non-violent struggle for a decent and fair chance, an opportunity to live in peace and harmony with nature, neighbors and oneself, with adequate compensation and conditions for labor and time. I personally support these efforts by UFWA and others elsewhere who are fighting humanity's fight.

SOLIDARITY FOREVER

Throughout the course of the United Farm Workers struggle for Union recognition, the United Auto Workers Union has proved itself a strong long-term ally. When the first strike was barely three months old, in December 1965, Walter P. Reuther, UAW President, went to Delano, California to pledge his Union's support for the fledgling UFW.

Days after assuming the UAW presidency, Leonard Woodcock showed his commitment to carry on the Union's fine tradition of Solidarity with the Farm Workers. President Woodcock joined Cesar Chavez in a downtown Detroit rally which began the journey of the historic "DELANO FREEDOM BELL". From Detroit, the UAW's hometown to Delano, the hometown of the UFW.

Since 1972 as Regional Director, I have followed my own dictates as well as the policy of our Union to support the Farm Worker's struggle wherever it is, and I pledge the continued support of UAW Region 6 in the future.

LONG LIVE THE UFW!

FREEDOM DOESN'T COME LIKE A BIRD ON A WING,
DOESN'T COME LIKE THE SUMMER RAIN,
FREEDOM, FREEDOM IS A HARD WON THING,
YOU'VE GOT TO WORK FOR IT

AND EVERY GENERATIONS GOT TO WIN IT AGAIN.

UNITED FARM WORKERS of AMERICA AFL-CIO

1434 West Olympic Boulevard, Los Angeles, California 90015 • (213) 381-1136

"Each time a man or woman stands up for justice the heavens sing and the world rejoices. Each time a man or woman stands up for justice and is struck down the heavens weep and the world mourns. Farm workers everywhere are angry and worried but we are not going to fall into the trap that our oppressors have fallen into. We do not need to destroy to win. We are a movement that builds and does not destroy." (Cesar Chavez)
