A C K N O W L E D G M E N T S

FOR PERMISSION to quote from Sayers's holograph manuscripts, I thank David Higham Associates, Ltd., and the Marion E. Wade Center in Wheaton, Illinois. I especially appreciate the gracious support given me at the Wade Center by Marjorie Lamp Mead, Associate Director, and Laura Schmidt, Archivist.

For permission to quote from Virginia Woolf's holograph manuscript of The Years, I thank the Society of Authors as the literary representative of the estate of Virginia Woolf, as well as the Henry W. and Albert A. Berg Collection of English and American Literature, the New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. I am grateful to Anne Garner, the librarian who facilitated my visit to the Berg Collection, and to Isaac Gewirtz, Curator of the Berg Collection, for granting me access to Woolf's original manuscript.

For permission to reproduce, in chapter 4, a revised version of the essay I published in Narrative 15, no. 1 (2007): 4–23, I thank The Ohio State University Press.

For the benefit of research leave, which permitted me to write this book from scratch instead of revising my dubiously advantageous single-author dissertation on John Cowper Powys, I thank the English department at Virginia Commonwealth University. For their help in my making the most of that research leave, I thank my friends and colleagues at VCU and in the International Society for the Study of Narrative.

Many friends have lent me their particular expertise and special assistance. I am grateful to all of them. A long string of adverbs amplifying that gratitude would never be sufficient. I appreciate especially the generosity and insights given me by Steve Arata, Beth Barr, Alison Booth, Gretchen Comba, Nick Frankel, Jerry McGann, Alan Palmer, Salvatore Pappalardo, Pat Spacks, Lauryl Tucker, and Jean Wyatt. They have helped me shape and hone, reshape and rehone these chapters with admirable patience. They are the village I could not do without.

I also have the pleasure of being in debt to Jim Phelan and Peter Rabinowitz, because they, too, helped me develop this book as well my career. Since the day I met them at the 2005 Narrative Conference in Louisville, Peter and Jim have supported me as a reader, writer, and teacher of narrative theory. They have encouraged me generously, giving me opportunities to establish myself as a scholar, offering me guidance that no junior scholar could rightfully expect and few young people in any profession actually encounter. Jim's constructive editing of my first publication, in Narrative, as well as his leadership during his six-week NEH seminar on narrative ethics, grounded my investment in the rhetorical theory of narrative. They have been exemplary series editors. At every step of the way they have helped me, giving me a model of mentorship I hope to emulate in the years ahead.

I thank my parents, my sister, my daughter, and Andrea Laue for supporting me unconditionally. And, with a very full heart, I thank my husband, collaborator, colleague, editor, and best friend, Jason Coats.

THE FOLLOWING have graciously allowed permission to reprint from Dorothy L. Sayers and Virginia Woolf manuscripts:
