Check your air quality.

Check your air quality. Smoke levels can change a lot during the day, so wait until air quality is better before you are active outdoors.

Choose a mask that will help protect you from smoke.

It is important to know that cloth masks will not protect you from wildfire smoke. N95 respirator masks can provide protection from wildfire smoke.

Take it easier!

Take it easier during smoky times to reduce how much smoke you inhale. If it looks or smells smoky outside, avoid strenuous activities such as mowing the lawn or going for a run.

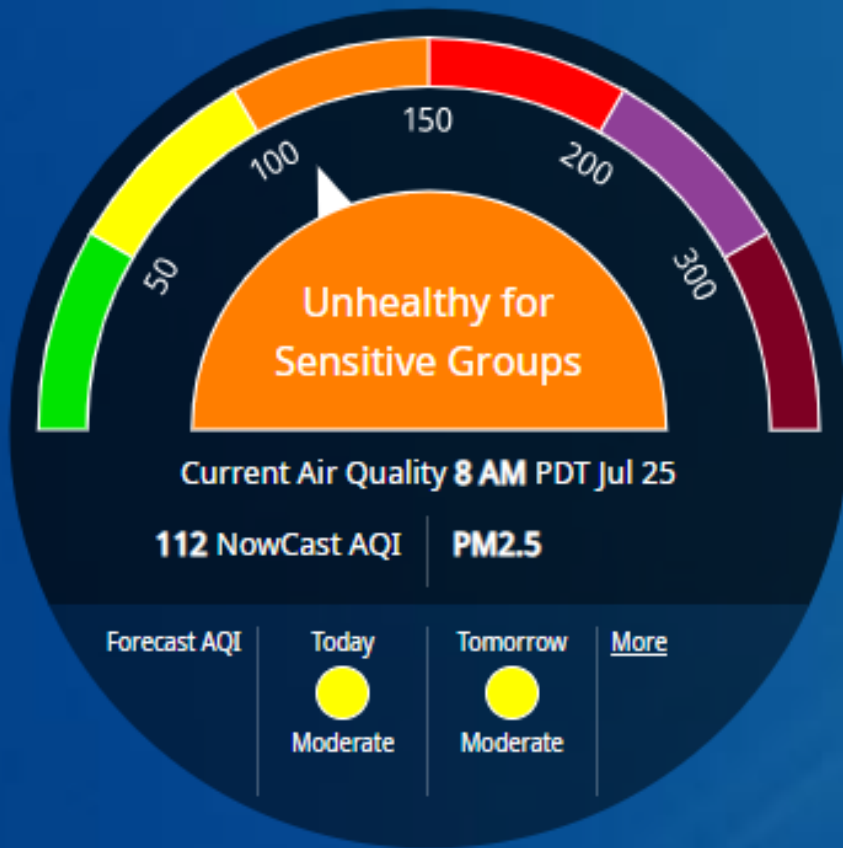

Reschedule outdoor work tasks.

Reschedule outdoor work tasks and activities to a time when air quality improves. If outdoor tasks and activities cannot be rescheduled and must be conducted when air quality is poor, it is recommended that individuals reduce smoke inhalation by:

- Limiting the time spent outdoors by only performing essential activities.
- Taking frequent breaks indoors in places where the air is clean, especially during periods with high outdoor levels of wildfire smoke.
- If you must work outdoors, wear a N95 respirator mask.

Note: Some areas may have regulations to reduce smoke exposure for outdoor workers.

Unhealthy for Sensitive Groups

People with heart or lung disease, older adults, children and teens – take any of these steps to reduce your exposure:

- Choose less strenuous activities (like walking instead of running) so you don't breathe as hard.
- Shorten the amount of time you are active outdoors.
- Be active outdoors when air quality is better.

Everyone else: Enjoy your outdoor activities.
