About

The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) is a member-led organization dedicated to providing a pathway to opportunity for student-athletes by prioritizing academics, well-being and fairness for those participating in college sports. The Association and its member schools protect and equip student-athletes for success on the field for life.

With three divisions, the organization is the largest college sports organization and is composed of various member organizations: 1,094 colleges and institutions and 99 voting athletic conferences. These member organizations include individuals from all levels and functions — including college presidents and chancellors, athletic directors, compliance administrators, faculty athletics representatives, coaches, conference staff and health and safety personnel, among others — all of whom support prioritizing academics, well-being and fairness.

The organization has a little over 500 national office staff members dedicated to helping college students develop leadership, confidence, discipline and teamwork through sports.

The NCAA generated over $1B in revenue in FY22, largely from the Division I Men’s Basketball Tournament. More than 96% of this revenue is returned to the membership in the form of distributions and programs supporting student-athletes and our educational mission.

The Position

Position Title

NCAA Board of Governors – Independent Members

Background

In January 2019, the NCAA members voted to restructure its highest governance body, the Board of Governors, by augmenting the board with five independent members with the experience, stature and objectivity to assist the NCAA in serving as the leader and regulator of college sports. This initiative was an effort to expand the diversity of perspectives and experience needed to address the complex issues the NCAA must manage.

In January 2022, the NCAA membership ratified a new constitution, which resulted in a smaller Board of Governors to streamline the decision-making authority on Association-wide issues. The Board of Governors has 16 members, including four individuals representing Division I to include at least one institutional president or chancellors, and one conference commissioner, one representative each from the Divisions II and III Presidents Councils, two independent members, and one graduated student-athlete as voting members; one president of a historically black college and university, the chairs of the Division I Council and the Divisions II and III Management Councils, two graduated student-athletes from each of the divisions not represented by the voting member student-athlete and the NCAA president as ex-officio nonvoting members. The NCAA seeks to add one new independent member to replace one whose term will expire in August 2023 and has chosen not to be reappointed.

By virtue of its mandate and prominent nature of the NCAA, the Board of Governors' leadership affects the entirety of collegiate athletics, often with broader impact in American society, given the reach and relevance of collegiate athletics. The independent members bring their skills and experience to bear in a complex, high-profile not-for-profit organization that has significant resource allocation responsibilities and far-reaching impact on the development of young people. To that end, it is critical that independent members are motivated by a genuine mission orientation and bring a recognizable track record of ethical leadership. Candidates who uphold the NCAA's commitment to diversity in a meaningful way will be compelling.

The NCAA seeks a wide variety of professional backgrounds in its independent members to contribute helpful perspectives to the Board of Governors. In particular, leaders who bring corporate, nonprofit or public sector experience that can inform decision-making will be valuable. For this vacancy, the Board of Governors is seeking an individual who is fluent in the changing media landscape. Those candidates with substantial board experience — reporting to a board, and/or serving on boards, either for- or nonprofit — will be most compelling.

Responsibilities

The Board of Governors is the highest governance body in the NCAA and focuses on strategic discussions that impact the Association and all of college sports. Members have a fiduciary responsibility to act in the best interest of all college sports, rather than the interest of any particular division, conference, school or sport.

Core responsibilities of the Board of Governors:

- Provide final approval and oversight of the Association-wide budget, enterprise risk management and strategic planning, and establish policies related to fiduciary responsibility.
- Employ the NCAA president, who shall be administratively responsible to the board.
- Formulate policies and procedures consistent with the NCAA Constitution.
- In consultation with the leadership of the divisional governing bodies, adopt and implement legal strategy, risk mitigation, and government relations and policy matters that affect the Association.
- Convene at the annual NCAA Convention and any special conventions as needed.

Term

One independent member, voted on annually by the two independent members, serves as the lead independent member on the Board of Governors Executive Committee and will serve in that role up to two years.

An independent member of the Board of Governors is appointed to a two-year term, renewable for an additional two years.
