

roses are red...

and so are many deep-sea animals

Jellyfish image courtesy of Kevin Raskoff, California State University, Monterey Bay

Did you know that red light does not reach ocean depths, so deep-sea animals that are red actually appear black and thus are less visible to predators and prey?