Giving back by going back

Joaquin Lemus, seen here with his mom, joined the Red Cross collections team in 2010. Joaquin recently started a new role with the Red Cross as a fleet coordinator but graciously moved back to collections for a month to help out during the nationwide blood crisis.

Man makes personal sacrifice to help

Things have come full circle for Red Crosser Joaquin Lemus. A phlebotomist since 2010, Joaquin recently began a new position as a Red Cross fleet coordinator, helping maintain the organization’s Boise-area vehicles and facilities.

He was enjoying this new role, but not long after he started that position, the omicron variant began its steady march across the country, making it much more difficult for the Red Cross to collect lifesaving blood.

Blood drives were being canceled and the Red Cross – like so many other organizations across the country – struggled with staffing shortages.

Phlebotomists were in short supply, and the nationwide blood inventory was at its lowest point in a decade. Joaquin knew he needed to do something to help.

So with little hesitation, he raised his hand to move back into his old position for a month or so and help his biomed teammates collect the blood products that hospitals desperately needed.

For Joaquin, blood collection is extremely personal after two close family members received transfusions.

POSITIONS AVAILABLE

We still need more collections staff in the Pocatello, Lewiston and Bozeman areas. Red Cross offers competitive pay, paid training, health benefits and the opportunity to build your career. A high school degree or equivalent is required.

Schoolkids raise funds for fire victims

In December, when Great Falls sixth-grader Katelyn Nix heard about the Gibson Flats grassfire burning south of town, she knew she wanted to do something to help the families who had lost their homes.

“I love to give back to others, and I love to see how that makes them feel,” the 12-year-old said.

She thought about it all day at school, and that afternoon as she road home with her friend Sophia Nelson, the two began to form a plan.

With the help of their parents, teachers, principal, the PTA and their Valley View classmates, Katelyn and Sophia gathered goodies for four baskets each with a different theme -- like movies or sports. They then raffled the baskets at their school, raising an amazing a check to the Montana Red Cross during a special event at their school. Katelyn said it didn’t take long to decide where she wanted the money to go.

“I thought it was going to be like $100 – that’s it,” Katelyn said. “Almost a $1,000 is pretty wild.”

“I was talking with our principal, and the Red Cross is the first thing that comes to mind that can spread the money and help people,” Katelyn said.

And she’s grateful to everyone who gave them support along the way.

“I’m very happy that everything worked out,” she said. “I’m very appreciative of everyone who helped out and helped make this what it could be.”

Welcome our new employees

We are excited to announce a couple of new hires in our region.

Courtney Wilson is the new executive admin for our region and is based in the Boise area.

With a strong desire to help others, Courtney comes to the American Red Cross after six years of working as an administrative assistant in higher education.

Courtney Wilson

In her free time, she enjoys going on adventures with her husband and daughter, exploring the great Idaho outdoors, reading, dancing and writing.

Courtney replaces Angela James, who has retired after almost nine years with the Red Cross. Angela will remain as a volunteer helping with the inventorying of mission cards and client assistance cards.

Rick Baker has joined the operations team and is working out of our Great Falls site. Rick will be responsible for our fleet and facilities in Great Falls, Helena and Bozeman. He served in the military for 22 years and has extensive experience in fleet, security and facility management.

Rick Baker

He enjoys the outdoors and loves to fish and hike.

Welcome, Courtney and Rick. Angela, thank you for your service.

In Montana, Executive Director Diane Wright has cultivated a strong partnership with Gov. Gianforte's office that has paid big dividends. A few weeks ago, Gov. Gianforte issued a proclamation declaring March as Red Cross Month in Montana. As part of the governor's office 12 Days of Giving Campaign in December, Gov. Gianforte encouraged Montanans to roll up their sleeves and donate lifesaving blood. And the governor proclaimed January as National Blood Donor Month and also visited our shelters during wildfire season to thank our volunteers.

This all led to positive media coverage in communities big and small across the state.

meaning to my job.”

Joaquin’s mother also required blood transfusions for an illness.

“She is A-OK now,” he said.

“Working in collections was a ‘job’ when I started but now it is more like a calling. It is so rewarding.”

Now the father of two, Joaquin originally came to the Red Cross in 2010 after working at Micron Technology, where many of his friends and co-workers had donated blood. Things came full circle for him there as well when he worked a Micron blood drive shortly after he became a phlebotomist.

“I even stuck my old engineering buddy there, then two more at Micron,” he said.

Since this winter’s blood crisis, the Idaho Red Cross has been able to hire and train several new phlebotomists, and the COVID surge has slowed dramatically. After personally helping collect 200 units of lifesaving blood during his temporary stint with the collections team, Joaquin has returned to his fleet and facilities position.

His flexibility and commitment to helping others hasn’t gone unnoticed.

“Joaquin’s willingness to assist with collecting lifesaving blood is a testament to his values,” said Dawn Brossart, regional chief operating officer.

“Once again he went above and beyond the call of duty and demonstrated what a strong team player he is. His hard work is an inspiration to everyone around him.”

Students at Vaughn Public Schools also did their part to help families impacted by the Gibson Flats fire with a fundraiser of their own.

Students who brought in a donation were allowed to wear their hats at school.

Their efforts tallied more than $120 for Red Cross relief efforts.
