Prior to Summer 2003, the main instrument used was SIRS; SIRS records are below.

The Student Instructional Rating System Report: Composite Profile.

[This profile provides a five-category summary of students' responses to a questionnaire administered by the the Office of Evaluation Services, Instructional Support Center, FSU. Each category is the mean of mean responses to four related items on the questionnaire. Prior to 1983 the questionnaire was only administered in one term each year. Completion of the questionnaire is voluntary and response rates in large classes are often low. The SIRS instrument was not administered from January 1996 to Fall 1997]

Interpretation:

1. Instructor Involvement: perceptions of instructor's involvement in and attitudes toward teaching. 1 most favorable, 5 least favorable.
2. Student Interest: degree of student interest in the course. Most favorable score 1, least favorable 5.
3. Student/Instructor Interaction: in terms of personal communication between students and instructor. Most favorable score 1, least favorable 5.
4. Course Demands: students' perception of difficulty of materials, assignments, and pace at which material is presented, relative to amount learned. Interpretation is difficult; extreme values of 1 and 5 correspond to courses that are perceived as extremely difficult and very easy relative to material learned, respectively; 3.0 is "neutral" and perhaps most desirable.
5. Course Organization: students' perceptions of the organization of both course material and class presentations. Most favorable score 1, least favorable 5. More detail on SIRS ratings and their interpretation is available on request
