Department of Sociology

Assistant or Early to Mid-Associate Professor

The University of Iowa's Department of Sociology invites applications for a tenure track position at the Assistant Professor or early to mid-Associate Professor level with research and teaching emphases in the area of criminology or criminal justice systems. The position will begin in the Fall 2020. The Department of Sociology is home to a major in Criminology, Law and Justice, and we seek candidates with strong records and exceptional promise who work within any of the subareas of criminology or criminal justice system research. We are especially interested in candidates who have strong records of high quality publication, commensurate with career stage. Candidates also are expected to show strong promise of developing an externally funded program of research in criminology or criminal justice. In addition to maintaining an ongoing successful program of research, the faculty member holding this position is expected to teach graduate and undergraduate courses that contribute to the core missions of our criminology undergraduate program and to the education of our Ph.D. students who are specializing in criminology. We also hope to hire a candidate who can contribute to other areas of departmental strength. Applicants should have a Ph.D. in Sociology, Criminology, or related field in hand by August 21, 2020.

For information on how to apply, please visit <http://jobs.uiowa.edu/> and reference Requisition #73696. Formal screening will begin on September 1, 2019 and will continue until the position is filled. Electronic attachments to the online application should include a letter of interest, curriculum vitae, research statement, copies of selected scholarly papers, any evidence of teaching experience or effectiveness, and email contact information for three letters of recommendation. Our department is committed to promoting a diverse, equitable, and inclusive climate within the department and the university. Candidates who can contribute to this climate are encouraged to describe their strengths in these areas. After applying, references will be sent a link to electronically upload their letters of recommendation. Informal inquiries about the position can be directed to jennifer-glanville@uiowa.edu (Chair of Sociology)
