Hi all,

I'm hoping you could help me out with a few questions regarding podcasts in the federal government. If you don't happen to know the answer directly but could put me in contact with someone at your agency, I would greatly appreciate it.

1. Is your federal agency producing podcasts?
2. How many podcasts are being produced from the agency?
3. Are the producers of the podcasts formally trained? Where are they getting training?
4. Where / how are they being produced? (location/equipment)
5. Where are they being hosted and/or delivered? (Apple podcasts, Amazon Music, stitcher, etc.)
6. How are they marketed?
7. And what is your measure of success? Are they successful?
8. What analytics are being used / checked?

I just wanted to check broadly and perhaps I can expand conversations. I appreciate your help!

Thank you so much!

Matt

Executive Order \(EO\) 14035 says, “the Federal Government must be a model for diversity, equity, inclusion, and accessibility, where all employees are treated with dignity and respect.”

As web managers, we have an important role in advancing this goal. At last week’s community huddle, we started a conversation about what we can do to make our websites and digital services more inclusive and reflect the diversity of the public we serve.

Tori Garten (Web Managers Community Co-lead) facilitated the huddle. We talked about various topics, including photos and bios on agency websites, pronouns, and recruiting and hiring for web/digital teams.

Aileen McGraw (FY21 TTS Diversity Guild Co-lead) and Greg Walker (18F DEI Rep for Engineering) also joined us to share information about ways they are approaching diversity, equity, and inclusion at Technology Transformation Services \(TTS\).

Aileen spoke about the 18F Content Guide and highlighted style guidance for inclusive language, which may be a good starting point for your agency.

Greg gave us a behind-the-scenes tour of TTS’ Inclusion Bot for Slack, which helps staff learn about exclusionary language and provides more inclusive alternatives. Be sure to check out the list of terms that causes the inclusion bot to respond.

During the huddle, participants also shared several other helpful resources:

- Diversity & Inclusion Policy - OPM - Policy, data, and oversight resources from OPM, including a one-pager on the DEI&A EO
- Universal Design: What is it? - A resource from Section508.gov on universal and inclusive design
- NIH UNITE Initiative - An initiative to identify and address structural racism within the NIH-supported and the greater scientific community
- Diversity and Inclusion - NYS Dept. of Environmental Conservation - The department includes a link to this page from their site footer

I'm looking forward to diving into this topic in a deeper way with all of you. I often see the web community as change makers with our focus on users, on sharing information in the best, most accessible ways. Frequently our jobs include or can't progress without change management (check on the recent digital.gov panel/webinar on that topic!). One aspect of change management of course is difficult conversations and mind shifting. I myself recently had the question asked "well if we do x, can we get around y? in relation to accessibility best practices.

I'm curious what difficult conversations you anticipate – or have had – around incorporating inclusive language, diversity, equity and accessibility. And – if you have had these difficult conversations, how have you approached your response to help shift to a more inclusive approach or "shift-left" as we say sometimes? What stories, examples, philosophies have you found to help move these conversations or turn the dial to be a little bit better?

You input will help us see what kinds of resources might be useful and helpful, what guidance, what best practices to tackle first in defining. Thank you all for your thoughtful considerations on this topic!

Are you only seeing this on specific jobs? If not, are you only searching while at work? We haven't had any other reports and I just confirmed it is working for me both on and off our agency's network. It may be an issue of your agency blocking part of the site.

Hi all, no endorsement, just passing along a free training opportunity.

A Better Way To Find, Fix, And Prevent Accessibility Issues \(Free Online Workshop\).

Workshop, 2x2.5h + Q&A • Tue & Wed, September 14–15
09:00 – 11:30 am pt (Pacific, US) • 18:00 – 20:30 cet (Europe)

Finding, fixing, and preventing accessibility issues doesn't have to be hard. It can actually be quite easy for dev teams to make a big impact.

In this 2-day workshop by our friends at Deque, you will learn useful tips and tools for how to build more accessible websites and why it's so important. You may not realize how much good you can do with very little effort.

Thanks!

Hello All--

I'm working to educate one of our new political staff members around our social media programs, including giving them a sense of what average and above-average results look like in general on FB, Twitter, IG, YouTube.

As far as I know, there's no "standard of record" so to speak, so I generally will look at a number of sources to see what they're touting as good results.

I'm wondering if there are any particular trust-worthy sources you all use to find numbers against which you measure your own results, or if there is indeed some reference source social media professionals use as THE standard for these numbers.

Thanks in advance for your help. (Also, if anyone's interested and this is not something that's already in our library, I'll keep track of the responses in a single doc I can share.)

Thanks in advance,
Paulette

Web managers,

The Federal Web Council, an interagency group of digital and web directors, collaborates across agencies to improve federal digital services. Below are highlights from the Council's August 19, 2021, meeting.

Digital service delivery

Government digital services enable the public to interact with their government on their terms, when it's most convenient for them. While the federal government has slowly been moving services online, the pandemic has pushed us to quickly adapt to a digital-first model — to better meet their missions and serve customers.

The Council discussed some actions we can take to accelerate the transition the delivery of federal information and services to digital channels, such as:

- Prioritizing and funding this work;
- Instituting enterprise digital governance;
- Understanding and advocating for customers; and
- Hiring and training the federal workforce, among others.

Do you have a best practice for digital service delivery? Please share a one-paragraph summary of your agency success story with Council Co-Chair, Rachel Flagg (rachel.flagg@gsa.gov). Rachel will compile and share back with the community.

U.S. Web Design System updates

The U.S. Web Design System team recently released version 2.12.1, a small point release. It includes several bug fixes and improvements such as minimizing images for PNGs and adding ARIA labels to range input.

The team also published external link research findings. Key takeaways:

- External link icons are not that effective in communicating external links, but using them does the least harm.
- Content matters more than icons.
- Users find it more important to know it's a government site when they get there, rather than trying to explain that in the link. It's more important to clearly identify as a government site (i.e., banner) than rely on link indicators.
- Users expect that our sites link to appropriate content.

Good morning content managers:

The Bureau of the Fiscal Service launched our annual Customer Satisfaction Survey with agency customers last week via the Qualtrics survey platform.

As an added measure to help transmission of the survey, can you ask your agency webmasters to whitelist noreply@qualtrics-survey.com effective today to September 21?

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Thanks.

Afternoon –

In response to Hurricane Ida's landfall on 8/29/2021, we're setting up a preliminary lane of communication structure for federal web communications. This authority for this action comes from Emergency Support Function 15 of the National Response Framework. Please forward this message as necessary.

(For those not familiar with the lane structure, the idea is to eliminate cross-posting of information among agencies and, instead, have everyone provide links to centralized "lanes" of information. So, for example, Transportation might post a press release related to Transportation activities... and instead of every other agency trying to keep up with adding that link to their site as well, a link to the Transportation release is added to one centralized page on USA.gov and everyone just links to that one page for information on What the U.S. Government is Doing.)

At this point, we're standing up two initial lanes – "What DHS and FEMA are Doing" and "What the U.S. Government is Doing"

- ACTION: When distributing materials related to Hurricane Ida, please include links to these two lanes on all materials.
- ACTION: When posting information to your agency website, please only post information related to your individual agency (using xxxxxx.gov/hurricane-ida or xxxxxx.gov/ida as a URL structure), then include links to the two lanes.

What DHS and FEMA are Doing

<https://www.fema.gov/hurricane-ida>

FEMA has established a landing page on FEMA.gov with the latest information from FEMA and DHS on the storm. The page is currently promoting response and recovery information and serves as a clearinghouse for related information from DHS. The page is located at <https://www.fema.gov/hurricane-ida> and is available in multiple languages.

What the U.S. Government is Doing

<https://www.usa.gov/hurricane-ida>

Spanish: <https://gobierno.usa.gov/huracan-ida>

GSA has created a landing page on USA.gov for government-wide information related to Hurricane Ida activities. The page is being populated now – if you have materials from your agency that need to be added to the page, please email usagovemergency@gsa.gov and they will coordinate posting. USA.gov can support both English and Spanish content. The page is located at <https://www.usa.gov/hurricane-ida>, and the Spanish page is at <https://gobierno.usa.gov/huracan-ida>.

- ACTION: Send the title and URL for any Hurricane Ida related materials posted on your agency website to usagovemergency@gsa.gov

For social media, we are currently asking folks to follow and retweet the following handles:

- @fema
- @femaespanol
- @femaregion4
- @femaregion6
- FEMA on Facebook
- FEMA Facebook en Español

Thanks – please let me know if you have any questions, comments, or suggestions!

1. When you say "whitelist" do you mean ask our email administrators to put these domains on a list so that our email system will not reject emails from those domains as spam?
yes, so they won't block the content
2. Who will receive these surveys?
The surveys go to the staff at the CFO agencies to survey them on their satisfaction with services provided by the Bureau of the Fiscal Service, Department of the Treasury
3. What types of emails should we expect to receive from <http://cvent-planner.com/> and @civilityms.com? (I'm assuming you meant @cvent-planning.com instead of <http://cevent-planner.com/>.)
Yes @cvent-planning.com - the e-mails are regarding the customer satisfaction survey that the Bureau of the Fiscal Service does annually with the CFO agencies.

Hello

Has anyone in the government web community conducted research on the use and value of embedding social feeds on website home pages? At one time it was all the rage, but I don't see it that often although stakeholders sometimes think that is a good way to tie in their social and web presence. Would love to see some analytics data from sites that have embedded a Twitter feed, for example.

I have a bias against it – I don't think it is helpful to a user who comes to a government site looking for specific information. But I would love to hear thoughts both for and against the use.

Look forward to your input

Hi Lakshmi,

I'm also interested in these analytics and their value. Initially, we placed the feed there as a signal of something fresh and updated, and while we do make other frequent updates on the homepage, the Twitter feed is often the most current item.

Our homepage Twitter feed shows the last two tweets from our account, and the homepage had 193,763 views last month. The Twitter account also earned 10.6K impressions per day in August. To get more helpful data, I'm assuming we would need to set up Conversion tracking, for anyone with more data, Did you set up Twitter's conversion tracking? Or how about Multi-Channel Funnels in Google Analytics?

I see the Twitter feed as more of a service for our social media presence and like that it is low maintenance. I'm excited to see other responses with data,

Thank you,

Happy Friday, I have been invited to research how machine learning / AI / data science will change analytics and web site optimization in the future, and how we can get there. (Part of this might be, “The future is here today but it’s not evenly distributed...”) The public sector has important privacy considerations, so not everything I’m coming across would be suitable for government web sites with “anonymous” users.

I would welcome your thoughts and resources as I do this research. I have already come across the following.

Interesting topic.

Do we even know who the public sector is when we look at the internet?

Is there any way to compare marketing statistics collected by one company? Or even two private sector companies, like the bond rating companies?

Hope everyone has a safe and healthy Labor Day weekend.

Hello,

Where does the design system go from USWDS 2.0? What did we learn from that release? What challenges can the design system better address as we move forward? How can the design system be ready to grow and evolve alongside the teams that use it?

Join Dan Williams for our monthly call on Thursday, September 16, 2-3pm ET to hear what the design system team is thinking as we peer into the crystal ball and look into the future. 🎉 This should be a good one.

Register here to join us!

This event is part of a monthly series that takes place on the third Thursday of each month. Don't forget to set a placeholder on your personal calendar for our future events this year.

We look forward to seeing you there!

Is your agency currently using both Adobe Analytics and DAP/GSA on its website, or did you do so until recently? If so, did you use both tools about equally, or depend more heavily on one or the other? If you dropped AA and went with DAP only, what were the main factors behind that decision?

Now, Let's Highlight Some Training...

Friday, Oct. 15, Morning: 9am - 1pm EDT

How to build more accessible websites with Drupal - Evolving Web

It's easy to fall into the trap of blindly applying rules from a list of accessibility best practices. Knowing how to prioritize and evaluate accessibility issues and solutions is a key skill for today's web designers and developers. Drupal gives you accessible defaults out of the box, but it's also important to understand how to keep your website accessible as you add content and features.

Thursday, Oct. 14, Morning: 9am - 1pm EDT

Designing Custom Content Models and Search Hit Types - Enterprise Knowledge

Structured content enables better knowledge management and more effective search results. In this training, learn tips to analyze patterns in unstructured content and use that analysis to design custom content models and search result types (otherwise known as search hit types).

Thursday, Oct. 14, Morning: 9am - 1pm EDT

Drupal from Development to Production to Scale

In this session we will start with a basic Drupal site running on a single AWS EC2 server. From there we will teach you how to decouple and scale the infrastructure into a production environment. We will incorporate multiple AWS managed services such as RDS, elasticache, S3, and Cloudfront and explore the benefits of using these managed services over their self-managed counterparts. At the end of this session you will understand how to architect a production Drupal site running on decoupled cloud infrastructure.

Are you Drupal-curious? Just getting started with CMS' and WebOps? This live, three-hour workshop, will take you from understanding what Drupal is, why Drupal 9 matters, to creating basic content, users, and an overview of more complex features. No prior experience with Drupal or web development is necessary. At the end of this workshop, you'll have an understanding of how content creation in Drupal works, and have a working test site that you can tinker with for as long as you like. Learning Drupal doesn't have to stop after this workshop. You'll get access to a recording of the workshop so you can go through the steps again, plus additional resources to take your learning further so you can leverage WebOps and Drupal to accelerate your workflows.

Drupal from Development to Production to Scale, by Mobomo

Afternoon Half Day: 1pm - 5pm ET

In this session we will start with a basic Drupal site running on a single AWS EC2 server. From there we will teach you how to decouple and scale the infrastructure into a production environment. We will incorporate multiple AWS managed services such as RDS, elasticache, S3, and Cloudfront and explore the benefits of using these managed services over their self-managed counterparts. At the end of this session you will understand how to architect a production Drupal site running on decoupled cloud infrastructure.

How to build more accessible websites with Drupal

HOW TO BUILD MORE ACCESSIBLE WEBSITES WITH DRUPAL -

Evolving Web

It's easy to fall into the trap of blindly applying rules from a list of accessibility best practices. Knowing how to prioritize and evaluate accessibility issues and solutions is a key skill for today's web designers and developers. Drupal gives you accessible defaults out of the box, but it's also important to understand how to keep your website accessible as you add content and features.

Now, Let's Highlight Some Training...

Friday, Oct. 15, Morning: 9am - 1pm EDT

How to build more accessible websites with Drupal -

Evolving Web

 It's easy to fall into the trap of blindly applying rules from a list of accessibility best practices. Knowing how to prioritize and evaluate accessibility issues and solutions is a key skill for today's web designers and developers. Drupal gives you accessible defaults out of the box, but it's also important to understand how to keep your website accessible as you add content and features.

Thursday, Oct. 14, Morning: 9am - 1pm EDT

Designing Custom Content Models and Search Hit Types -

Enterprise Knowledge

Structured content enables better knowledge management and more effective search results. In this training, learn tips to analyze patterns in unstructured content and use that analysis to design custom content models and search result types (otherwise known as search hit types).

Thursday, Oct. 14, Morning: 9am - 1pm EDT

Drupal from Development to Production to Scale

 In this session we will start with a basic Drupal site running on a single AWS EC2 server. From there we will teach you how to decouple and scale the infrastructure into a production environment. We will incorporate multiple AWS managed services such as RDS, elasticache, S3, and Cloudfront and explore the benefits of using these managed services over their self-managed counterparts. At the end of this session you will understand how to architect a production Drupal site running on decoupled cloud infrastructure.

Need a Mug or Shirt in Time for Drupal GovCon?

We have great t-shirt designs from Karl Kaufmann. So, what if you could get one of those designs on a new mask, T-shirt or tote before AND after Drupal GovCon? This year, you can!

Order today and you can be sipping coffee during a virtual training from your very own Drupal GovCon mug!

Greetinga all,

I received this request form one of our Bureaus and because I've never attempted to claim a business, I wanted to know if any of you have and if you have any advice:

Quick question: Do you know if any other bureaus have had trouble claiming businesses on Google? We're having a devil of a time, mainly because national parks don't have a means of being claimed! Only landmarks in the parks, and even with those, it's almost impossible bc

- 1. we can't use our gov addresses since that incurs a charge and*
- 2. their requirements make it rather difficult (e.g., you must use a telephone number that a person answers to claim it, and once that person answers, then that is the number listed with the landmark....but often that isn't the number for the public to use (which are sometimes phone trees, but you can't change the number or you lose ownership).*
- 3. I'd love to chat with someone who has navigated this maze, or if no one else has faced this.*

Any insight would be helpful.

Cheers,

I did bulk verification and worked with a Google My Business staff contact. They keep changing their support environment so I'm not certain if you can still get to a live person to help with the bulk verification. I manage over 500 profiles and have trained 60+ Iowa park rangers on Google My Business and would be glad to help.

Hello list,

The Design and Development team at the CFPB has created a manual accessibility audit to evaluate web pages for Section 508 compliance. We're looking to open source this audit, but before we do so, we would love to have folks on this list try it out and provide us their feedback.

The audit is currently written for use with a MacBook with Microsoft Office installed and an iPhone, reflecting the tools our team has at hand. I'm guessing most on this list are PC-based, but —if you are equipped with a Mac with Microsoft Office installed and/or an iPhone, and would be willing to try this audit out and provide feedback, please email me at sonna.kim@cfpb.gov.

(Note that this is a cross-post from the 508 listserv.)

Thank you!

Good afternoon, Content Managers!

Apologies if you've received this on another listserv already today. The USAGov outreach team would like to share more about a public engagement campaign launched in September: Hispanic Heritage Month (HHM)!

USAGov en Español kicked off HHM on Wednesday, September 15 and will run through October 15, 2021.

This year, USAGov en Español is highlighting and working directly with federal agencies that provide authoritative information about programs and services in Spanish and supporting the Spanish-speaking community during a multi-channel HHM campaign.

We are promoting the information agencies provide in Spanish on our @USAGovespanol social media and email marketing channels, and creating original content for our bilingual website. In case you missed it: there's still time to go along with the campaign.

- Follow #TuGobiernoEnEspañol across social media.
- Join in with your own messages or retweet and share from agency accounts.
- Follow @USAGovespanol on Twitter and Facebook, and through featured content on USA.gov.

We encourage partners with both English and Spanish language accounts to retweet and share from the hashtag #TuGobiernoEnEspañol throughout the month-long campaign!

Afternoon all -

DHS has had issues logging into applications that use Max.gov for two-factor authentication (TFA) today. Biggest one was being locked out of GovDelivery. Took us a bit, but we managed to track down the solution. Depending on how your agencies handle Certificate Authority updates, you guys might be in the same boat.

Message from MAX support is below.

v/r

(b) (6), (b) (7)(C)

Hello,

After additional investigation, our team has identified the cause of the PIV/CAC login issue. A new Certificate Authority (CA) was completed for MAX.gov applications today. On most user systems this new CA was automatically installed, however many agencies have disabled automatic CA updates, and some of those agencies have not manually installed the new CA.

To resolve this issue, please notify your agency's helpdesk and ask them to install the new "ISRG Root X1" CA in your "Trusted Root Certification Authorities" list.

A copy of the new CA can be obtained from: <https://letsencrypt.org/certs/isrgrootx1.pem>
 Additional information can be found at: <https://letsencrypt.org/docs/certificate-compatibility/>

If your agency's helpdesk require assistance please have them email us directly at maxsupport@max.gov. We will be more than happy to assistance them if need.

You can provide additional information or communicate with us at any time by replying to this email.

Thank you for using MAX.gov.

Speakers and Additional IAAF Information

IAAF 2021 has an excellent lineup of speakers, presenters and panelists including:

- Senator Tammy Duckworth - U.S. Senator Tammy Duckworth is an Iraq War Veteran, Purple Heart recipient and former Assistant Secretary of the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs who was among the first handful of Army women to fly combat missions during Operation Iraqi Freedom. Sen. Duckworth served in the Reserve Forces for 23 years before retiring at the rank of Lieutenant Colonel in 2014. She was elected to the U.S. Senate in 2016 after representing Illinois's Eighth Congressional District in the U.S. House of Representatives for two terms.
- Judy Huemann - Ms. Huemann has been referred to as the "mother of disability rights" and the major force behind getting Congress to sign Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, the first U.S. federal civil rights protection for people with disabilities. She is a lifelong advocate for the rights of disabled people and an internationally recognized leader in the disability rights community. Judy was featured on The Trevor Noah Show, award-winning documentary film "Crip Camp: A Disability Revolution is a 2020 American," and many other documentary films and television specials.
- Whitney Quesenbery - Ms. Quesenbery is the Director of the Center for Civic Design. Whitney is passionate about making interactions with government effective and enjoyable, bringing design literacy to elections and other government workers, and is on a mission to ensure voter intent through design. She combines a fascination with people and an obsession to communicate clearly with her goal of usable accessibility for all.

The 2021 Interagency Accessibility Forum (IAAF) is sponsored by the Federal Chief Information Officer Council's (Federal CIO Council) Accessibility Community of Practice (ACOP) and hosted by the Government-wide IT Accessibility Program from the Office of Government-wide Policy (OGP) of the General Services Administration (GSA), the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), the Department of Labor (DOL), and the Merit Service Protection Board (MSPB), in partnership with other federal agencies.

Training Last Chance!

Wednesday, Oct. 13, Morning: 9am -

Crash Course on Content Assembly for Drupal Sites

Drupal provides all the tools you need to create a website or web application, but often people run into problems by taking approaches that may sound good on the surface, but can cause problems later. Over time, Drupal site builders and architects learn how to avoid these problems, but usually the hard way.

In this session, you will get a crash course in Drupal architecture & assembly models. We will discuss content and data models at a high level before diving into multiple assembly methods including core blocks, Paragraphs, Layout Builder, Gutenberg, and Acquia Site Studio. You will learn the pros and cons of each approach, what the best practices are, and how to know which methods are the best.

Don't learn the hard way! After joining this session you will have the tools you need to confidently make great decisions on how to build your next project.

Deep Dive: Getting the Most out of Drupal Core

Drupal 9 now has even more core functionality than any other previous version - entities, menus, views, taxonomy, layouts, etc. In fact, it is so useful, that you can do most of what you need without needing any extra modules!

Join us as we dive deeply into Drupal core, and reveal some of the more advanced, powerful and arcane features that are available. We will explore these features together as we look at the practical applications. We will also reserve time for a large group discussion, so bring your questions.

Drupal is the “original” low code framework. With the right information, you can do far more than most people realize.

Hello!

I've been reading a bit about IndexNow. There may not be tons of support out there; but as it's a Bing project and Bing is an engine driving a very common federal site-search tool, I thought that folks (Not me, yet!) may already be experimenting with it.

Anyone?

We're only at the IndexNow research stage right now at Treasury-IRS. Definitely curious to see how it will be integrated with Akamai, as they said they plan to support it.

Good afternoon everybody,

I'm curious if anybody in this community might be able to offer technical suggestions about using Composer behind an authenticated proxy server?

My team uses Drupal to manage a few of our intranet web sites within SSA. We're trying to use Composer to manage our sites' codebase and modules, but are having trouble using it behind our proxy server. Our proxy requires authentication, and I was able to get this working before by creating my own composer.bat to authenticate to the proxy before calling the real Composer. However, SSA just changed its proxy authentication method to Kerberos, and I can't get Composer to take that 2nd hop.

I know Composer uses curl to get packages, and I'm able to run curl myself by providing the correct parameters:

curl.exe -sL http://repo.packagist.org/packages.json --proxy http://\[SSA's proxy server\]:80 --proxy-negotiate --user [username]:[password] -I

When running that command, I get a 407 Authentication Required followed by 200 OK, as expected. However, I haven't found a way to configure Composer to call its curl requests using these parameters. My http_proxy and https_proxy environment variables are set correctly, and I was hoping I could include my credentials in the URL (ex. http://[encoded username]:[encoded password]@[SSA's proxy server]:80), but that didn't get me past the 407 Authentication Required block I get when calling Composer.

Any help I could get would be greatly appreciated! Feel free to reply directly to me as to not clog up the listserv.

Hello all,
I sent this questionnaire out initially in August and am looking for more responses. I figured I'd expand on why I am requesting information on podcasting and hopefully the data and observation will potentially help you.

I'm requesting data on podcasting for a project for a leadership program that I'm in. At Defense Media Activity, we are re-establishing the agency podcast program. We've already looked at some improvements internally and are using responses to this questionnaire for an external perspective and benchmarking effort.

If you would like, the data and any observations made from the data provided can be shared with you. My leadership team's report and recommendations are due in the spring of 2022. I have a running list of interested parties of those who requested information when I sent my first survey via email.

I've tried to clean up the survey and am using Touchpoints. The feedback is anonymous but if you would like to discuss further, please submit your contact information on the last question. Please see the survey here \(https://touchpoints.app.cloud.gov/touchpoints/a28e688c/submit\) and please submit responses before November 14th, 2021. (if you've already responded, no need to do the survey again)

Thank you so much for your participation!

Good afternoon:

Our CFTC legal department and procurement staff would like me to identify a Google POC or contact information to discuss Google Tag Manager (GTM) terms of service (TOS) questions that they may have to negotiate the CFTC's use of the service. We used Google Analytics, and they approved it's use so many predecessors back. But, they require a review of the GTM TOS to grant "approved" legal use.

Have there been other agencies that have required a legal review of the GTM TOS? If so, can you share any insight to how your agency facilitated such? Has anyone actually connected with a Google POC to discuss legal TOS? Is there an alternative to another tag manager for our PDFs that I may be overlooking?

Any recommendations or insight shared is greatly appreciated at this point.
Thank you.

Maybe there are more ways than tag managers. Does it matter if it's third-party or not?

I believe your webserver is logging every request. I think that is one way to check.

Take care. Stay healthy.

My agency needs to put together a committee for the web (and other digital content).

I envision a high-level committee to tackle the content strategy and site functionality along with a sub-committee to become content producers. The ideal team would include members from across all divisions.

Is anyone willing to share how their web content teams are organized? Bonus points for documentation used when formally initiating this committee/group!

The Federal Web Council, an interagency group of digital and web directors, collaborates across agencies to improve federal digital services. Below are highlights from the Council's October 21, 2021, meeting.

The evolution of USA.gov

USA.gov is working to create the digital front door for the United States government. Its mission is to make it easier for everyone to find and understand the government services and information they need—anytime, anywhere, any way they want.

It got its start when Internet entrepreneur Eric Brewer, whose early research was funded by the Department of Defense, offered to donate a powerful search engine to government. That gift helped accelerate the government's earlier work to create a government-wide portal. In June 2000, President Clinton announced the gift from the Federal Search Foundation, a nonprofit organization established by Brewer, and instructed that an official U.S. web portal be launched within 90 days. USA.gov went online on September 22, 2000, under the name FirstGov.gov.

Over the past 21 years, USA.gov has evolved, including its governance and team structure. Several staff members joined the Council to discuss their approach to staffing, roles, and responsibilities.

Read the USA.gov blog to follow their progress. And visit Digital.gov to learn more about the key skill sets that every digital organization needs on their digital dream team.

U.S. Web Design System updates

The U.S. Web Design System (USWDS) team is thinking about the future of the design system. Where does the design system go from USWDS 2.0? What did they learn from the 1.0 and 2.0 releases? What challenges can the design system better address as we move forward? How can the design system be ready to grow and evolve alongside the teams that use it?

Three main points:

- There is a new major version coming in Winter 2022: USWDS 3.0.
- The team will make it as easy as possible to upgrade and migrate to USWDS 3.0.
- They want to support informed incremental design.

Read the recap of the September 2021 USWDS monthly call to learn more about the future of the design system.

Good morning

The Bureau of the Fiscal Service is putting on a government wide conference named the Joint Financial Management and Improvement Program (JFMIP) that includes OMB, Treasury, GAO, and OPM. The 2021 JFMIP *Virtual*SM webinar, a cooperative undertaking between the U.S. Department of the Treasury, Government Accountability Office, Office of Management and Budget, and Office of Personnel Management, will be held on November 17, 2021 from 12 pm – 4:45pm.

The registrants need to receive an email from Events@civilityms.com but many have not been able to receive it in their government e-mail accounts.

Could you please work with your IT departments to allow e-mails from Events@civilityms.com to go to their regular inboxes?

Please make sure this is allowed through January 1, 2022.

Thank you very much for your help.

Greetings,

The next IT Accessibility Community Meeting will be on Tuesday, December 7, 2021 and will be a fully virtual event. Our theme, "Winter Break: Accessibility Lights, DEIA Camera...ACTION" continues to focus on reconnecting our broader accessibility community members and charting the path forward. The topics we'll discuss at the meeting include:

- DEIA and the Accessibility Community
- What is The Big Picture
- Using the Tools We Have To Accomplish the Goal

EVENT DETAILS

DATE: December 7, 2021

TIME: 1:00 pm - 3:00 pm EST

WHERE: Virtual [See the link below]

WHO: Anyone involved or interested in Section 508

REGISTRATION

To participate, please click on this registration link. Registration is now open and will close 12/3 at 12:00 p.m.

OPTIONAL UGLY SWEATER CONTEST DURING THE EVENT

Keeping with our December meeting tradition, the annual “Beauty Is In The Eye Of The Beholder” Ugly Sweater Contest will take place. Take a picture of yourself in your “best” holiday sweater and submit it to section.508@gsa.gov by 3:00 p.m. on Friday, 12/3. Please include your name and agency with your picture. You must be present at the meeting wearing your sweater to be eligible to win. Voting for the best ugly sweater will take place during the meeting. Our reigning champ from last year’s ugly sweater contest is Tim Creagan, from the Access Board. Will he be dethroned this year?

This meeting will be supported by Zoom for Government (Fedramp certified). Please feel free to attend via your personal device.

*Note: by submitting your picture you agree to the following:

- Your picture being shared during the meeting for voting
- Wearing your sweater during the meeting for others to see
- Your picture “as the winner” being shared on section508.gov

Hi,

We are looking into Google Programmable Search Engine (also known as Custom Search Engine-CSE and Google Site Search) for Site Search and considering one of the two API solutions (Custom Search JSON API or Custom Search Site Restricted JSON API). I searched the archives but did not see any discussion on this so I apologize if previously discussed and I missed it. We are in deep discussions with our contractor on our requirements. I am also in communication with Google for some details and clarifications but wanted to check with you all whether anyone implemented Google Programmable Search Engine as Site Search. Some questions in mind are:

1. Which option did you chose and why – simple CSE, JSON API or Restricted JSON API?
2. Did you have any 508 compliance issues?
3. Any issues with Search Engine Results Page (SERP) visual customization (design) if you implemented one of JSON API solutions?
4. Any issues with click data feedback to Google Analytics for Search Analytics Reports?
5. Any issues with daily/monthly search query limitation (10,000 searches/day)?

Thanks in advance.

As part of a strategic planning effort at the OCC, we are looking to find answers to these two questions. Recommendations on the smart people and companies to talk with?

1. What is "digital experience" in 10 years and what should our organization be doing to prepare for that?
2. What foundational technologies and organizational skills should be in place for organizations to be ready?

We implemented GCE here at OCC. All our public sites are now on GCE. We don't use the API, instead opting for the free one with an interface update. Once Google confirmed that we were a government entity the advertisements were removed.

Here are 3 examples of google's GCE with different "skins". Each search is for the term "contact".

Hi Heitham,

These are great questions and I hope you can share the answers with the community.

I would say a focus on Customer Experience, better/more integrated technologies, artificial intelligence (the robots won't take over our jobs, but will make them easier) and a different approach to privacy. Younger generations definitely expect a customized, digital, seamless experience, whether it comes from the public or the commercial sector.

Here are some resources I have found useful. I am not endorsing these specific companies and am listing in no particular order:

Accenture's Digital Labs: <https://www.accenture.com/us-en/services/accenture-labs/digitalexperiences>

KPMG's Me, My life, My Wallet: <https://home.kpmg/xx/en/home/insights/2021/02/me-my-life-my-wallet-report.html>

Deloitte: HUX: <https://www.deloittedigital.com/us/en/offerings/customer-led-marketing/advertising--marketing-and-commerce/hux.html>

Pretty much all of the big consulting companies will have something. It is a hot topic.

And last but not least, our friends at GSA: Digital.gov features a lot of stories of success and innovation in government, so I think that could be another source of inspiration.

Looking forward to hearing more about who our other colleagues plan for the future.

Best of luck!

I have always thought the feds are missing an opportunity to make better use of feeds to unleash the content from their URLs and let everyone (especially the topic based sites like consumer.gov) get in the game of mashing up our content to organize it for findability and sharing. Yes this is today's tech, not tomorrow's tech, but it is not as widely adopted as it could be and that could make a big difference.

Imagine a world where the content could be repurposed freely so the reader gets to savor the content where they find it at intuitive URLs based on every day topics, instead of first making them become SEO masters to figure out where we put it or how the government is organized. Then we get the create once publish everywhere model that is the Nirvana we all seek. (Plus it takes a sledge hammer the redundant content we can somehow never quite whack away – yes I'm thinking of "whack a mole" at the boardwalk - LOL)

Then imagine a team that includes outreach specialists who work to "place" our feeds in other existing publications to amplify our communications – set it and forget it broadcasting that could feed the content beast that exists in Social Media and elsewhere.

By keeping the content trapped inside our org structure URLs, which are sometimes confusing and not especially easy for the average person to find, we aren't doing anyone any favors IMHO

Of course all of this might be solved if we ever had the resolve to go the way of the UK and do a "one" website strategy a la <https://www.gov.uk/>

@Kathleen, you raise several great points, especially about not requiring the public to "become SEO masters to figure out" where government content is located.

I love the U.K.'s one website strategy you referenced at www.gov.uk. Today, I stumbled across an analogous U.S. website that looks to attempt the same thing--<https://www.usa.gov/>. Maybe usa.gov could use better promotion?

The content management system... I have... with the... with the...

These are great questions and I hope you can share the answers with the community.

I would say a focus on Customer Experience, better/more integrated technologies, artificial intelligence (the robots won't take over our jobs, but will make them easier) and a different approach to privacy. Younger generations definitely expect a customized, digital, seamless experience, whether it comes from the public or the commercial sector.

Here are some resources I have found useful. I am not endorsing these specific companies and am listing in no particular order:

Accenture's Digital Labs: <https://www.accenture.com/us-en/services/accenture-labs/digitalexperiences>

KPMG's Me, My life, My Wallet: <https://home.kpmg/xx/en/home/insights/2021/02/me-my-life-my-wallet-report.html>

Deloitte: HUX: <https://www.deloittdigital.com/us/en/offerings/customer-led-marketing/advertising--marketing-and-commerce/hux.html>

Pretty much all of the big consulting companies will have something. It is a hot topic.

And last but not least, our friends at GSA: Digital.gov features a lot of stories of success and innovation in government, so I think that could be another source of inspiration.

Looking forward to hearing more about who our other colleagues plan for the future.

Greetings,

The next IT Accessibility Community Meeting will be on Tuesday, December 7, 2021 and will be a fully virtual event. Our theme, "Winter Break: Accessibility Lights, DEIA Camera...ACTION" continues to focus on reconnecting our broader accessibility community members and charting the path forward. The topics we'll discuss at the meeting include:

- DEIA and the Accessibility Community
- What is The Big Picture
- Using the Tools We Have To Accomplish the Goal

EVENT DETAILS

DATE: December 7, 2021

TIME: 1:00 pm - 3:00 pm EST

WHERE: Virtual [See the link below]

WHO: Anyone involved or interested in Section 508

REGISTRATION

To participate, please click on this registration link. Registration is now open and will close 12/3 at 12:00 p.m.

OPTIONAL UGLY SWEATER CONTEST DURING THE EVENT

Keeping with our December meeting tradition, the annual “Beauty Is In The Eye Of The Beholder” Ugly Sweater Contest will take place. Take a picture of yourself in your “best” holiday sweater and submit it to section.508@gsa.gov by 3:00 p.m. on Friday, 12/3. Please include your name and agency with your picture. You must be present at the meeting wearing your sweater to be eligible to win. Voting for the best ugly sweater will take place during the meeting. Our reigning champ from last year’s ugly sweater contest is Tim Creagan, from the Access Board. Will he be dethroned this year?

This meeting will be supported by Zoom for Government (Fedramp certified). Please feel free to attend via your personal device.

*Note: by submitting your picture you agree to the following:

- Your picture being shared during the meeting for voting
- Wearing your sweater during the meeting for others to see
- Your picture “as the winner” being shared on section508.gov

- 1) "make better use of feeds" - I wish RSS and/or Atom, and local RSS aggregators like Thunderbird were more popular. To me, it simpler and safer. I enjoy RSS feeds from Bruce Schneier and Ars Technica. I wish Gibson Research Corp. would bring them back.
- 2) "mashing up your content to organize if for findability and sharing" - For me, findability is related to topic and context. For a purchase, more locations is better. For information, more locations (including partial content) may mean I should fact check. So I guess, it depends.
- 3) " Yes this is today's tech, " - today's tech, or today's marketing? Tomorrow's tech still depends on how much we participate.

There so much out there, it's it time we become more discriminating, plus slow down?

Hope everyone had a safe enjoyable Thanksgiving.

Good points (b) (6) +1 to participation, especially!

I should explain that by using feeds I was advocating for doing an embed so the content lives on multiple sites at once (create once publish everywhere).

I think back to a conversation I had with a web producer at the Fox Business channel when they were just getting started. They saw CNBC as the big competitor and they were building a channel from scratch. Enter embeds/feeds – They shared their content/data with other sites who were published it in a “set it and forget it” way in containers on their pages. Fox Business went all in on this strategy and within a few months they had lapped CNBC several times using the yardstick of traffic.

So if your success metric is eyeballs and traffic, as it was with Fox Business, then they scored big by adopting feeds as the strategy. No newsreader necessary.

If the link goes back to a single source as it would with an embed implemented this way, then you aren't putting people into a fact-checking bind.

Hi (b) (6)

RSS/Atom/etc. feeds seem to serve as an indicator of periodic news for search engines (specifically Google), so I generally recommend adding some sort of feed mechanism to news, blogs, etc.

1) "make better use of feeds" - I wish RSS and/or Atom, and local RSS aggregators like Thunderbird were more popular. To me, it simpler and safer. I enjoy RSS feeds from Bruce Schneier and Ars Technica. I wish Gibson Research Corp. would bring them back.

2) "mashing up your content to organize if for findability and sharing" - For me, findability is related to topic and context. For a purchase, more locations is better. For information, more locations (including partial content) may mean I should fact check. So I guess, it depends.

3) " Yes this is today's tech, " - today's tech, or today's marketing? Tomorrow's tech still depends on how much we participate.

I have always thought the feds are missing an opportunity to make better use of feeds to unleash the content from their URLs and let everyone (especially the topic based sites like consumer.gov) get in the game of mashing up our content to organize it for findability and sharing. Yes this is today's tech, not tomorrow's tech, but it is not as widely adopted as it could be and that could make a big difference.

Imagine a world where the content could be repurposed freely so the reader gets to savor the content where they find it at intuitive URLs based on every day topics, instead of first making them become SEO masters to figure out where we put it or how the government is organized. Then we get the create once publish everywhere model that is the Nirvana we all seek. (Plus it takes a sledge hammer the redundant content we can somehow never quite whack away – yes I'm thinking of "whack a mole" at the boardwalk - LOL)

Then imagine a team that includes outreach specialists who work to "place" our feeds in other existing publications to amplify our communications – set it and forget it broadcasting that could feed the content beast that exists in Social Media and elsewhere.

By keeping the content trapped inside our org structure URLs, which are sometimes confusing and not especially easy for the average person to find, we aren't doing anyone any favors IMHO

Of course all of this might be solved if we ever had the resolve to go the way of the UK and do a "one" website strategy a la <https://www.gov.uk/>

These are great questions and I hope you can share the answers with the community.

I would say a focus on Customer Experience, better/more integrated technologies, artificial intelligence (the robots won't take over our jobs, but will make them easier) and a different approach to privacy. Younger generations definitely expect a customized, digital, seamless experience, whether it comes from the public or the commercial sector.

Here are some resources I have found useful. I am not endorsing these specific companies and am listing in no particular order:

Accenture's Digital Labs: <https://www.accenture.com/us-en/services/accenture-labs/digitalexperiences>

KPMG's Me, My life, My Wallet: <https://home.kpmg/xx/en/home/insights/2021/02/me-my-life-my-wallet-report.html>

Deloitte: HUX: <https://www.deloittedigital.com/us/en/offerings/customer-led-marketing/advertising--marketing-and-commerce/hux.html>

Pretty much all of the big consulting companies will have something. It is a hot topic.

And last but not least, our friends at GSA: Digital.gov features a lot of stories of success and innovation in government, so I think that could be another source of inspiration.

Looking forward to hearing more about who our other colleagues plan for the future.

What timing—I was cleaning up my “digital desk” just an hour ago and came across a great example of this in my old notes! I can’t remember if it was on this listserv or a different one I’m subscribed to, but someone shared the below example earlier this year:

Services & Resources | HHS.gov - Content Syndication

Using HHS web content saves you time and money. You don’t need to write your own health content or worry about updating web pages. Browse and choose from topics in the HHS Syndication Storefront and then simply add the related code to your web page. The end result - HHS content will populate on your web page with your website’s look and feel!

Learn more about content syndication. New content will be offered regularly, but please let us know if you have a specific topic to request. If you need additional information, or have any feedback, please contact Syndication@hhs.gov.

Don’t know how successful the Storefront has been, but I love the idea and would like to see other government agencies do something similar.

Cheers,

CAUTION: This email has originated from a source outside of USPTO. PLEASE CONSIDER THE SOURCE before responding, clicking on links, or opening attachments.

Good points (b) (6) +1 to participation, especially!

I should explain that by using feeds I was advocating for doing an embed so the content lives on multiple sites at once (create once publish everywhere).

I think back to a conversation I had with a web producer at the Fox Business channel when they were just getting started. They saw CNBC as the big competitor and they were building a channel from scratch. Enter embeds/feeds – They shared their content/data with other sites who were published it in a “set it and forget it” way in containers on their pages. Fox Business went all in on this strategy and within a few months they had lapped CNBC several times using the yardstick of traffic.

So if your success metric is eyeballs and traffic, as it was with Fox Business, then they scored big by adopting feeds as the strategy. No newsreader necessary.

If the link goes back to a single source as it would with an embed implemented this way, then you aren't putting people into a fact-checking bind.

Change your timeline from ten years to six months, maybe up to a year. Then be prepared to revise your plan every six months, ad infinitum.

You can't "be ready." Your users will not be playing catch up with you; you will be playing catch up them.

As for foundational technologies and organizational skills, I'm gonna remain retro and be old school. We are in the business of communication. Effective communications. Get people with real communication skills and real IT skills. Too many these days seem to be just plug-n-play "experts" who can't construct a sentence with proper noun and verb formation, and/or only have rote technology skills.

Don't jump on the bandwagon just because Pavlov is ringing a bell. It can be difficult to discern between a fad and a trend. Folks who have calluses on their hands, know the difference between a Philips and a Torx (and when to use the correct one), often have better insight than too many who can only "cut and paste."

Lastly, strive for clarity, quality, and decisive decision-making. Because not only do you have to fly the plane, you will be building it while flying it!

At Fiscal Service, we are developing a road map and implementation plan for using chat bots and live chat on our websites and with our call centers to improve self-service for our customers and to reduce the number of routine calls and e-mails by using chatbots to provide the answers to those routine questions.

We are looking to get information and case studies from federal agencies who have successfully implemented chat bots and live chat.

Is there anyone out there willing to share that information with us? If so, please reply to me at the e-mail address below.

Hello web managers,

The Federal Web Council, an interagency group of digital and web directors, collaborates across agencies to improve federal digital services. Below are highlights from the Council's November 18, 2021, meeting.

21st Century IDEA reporting

All federal executive branch agencies must submit their third annual report on progress implementing 21st Century IDEA by mid-December. See, for example, GSA's 2020 report on its progress in implementing 21st Century IDEA at gsa.gov/digitalstrategy.

GSA drafted and shared a template for our 2021 report, and I've attached it to this email. Though it's not required to use the template, you're welcome to use it to develop your report as well.

Coordinate your reporting efforts with your agency CIO and Web Council rep.

Digital end-to-end efficiency framework

The Bureau of the Fiscal Service's Office of Financial Innovation and Transformation developed a Digital End-to-End Efficiency Framework to help agencies transform their business processes by reducing unnecessary process steps, automation, and innovation to achieve large-scale efficiencies.

Team members joined the Council to discuss the framework and playbook (PDF), including tools and job aids to help guide agencies out of analog and into digital.

U.S. Web Design System updates

The U.S. Web Design System (USWDS) team is thinking about the future of the design system, and they provided an update on USWDS 3.0, a new major version coming next year.

Read a recap of the October 2021 USWDS monthly call to learn how we can better solve problems together to prepare for USWDS 3.0.

Does anyone have experience with YouTube “Brand” accounts? We are encountering some administrative pressures to switch in order to facilitate our distributed posting approach. (Essentially, some people we authorize to post no longer can.) That’s one advantage – are there others, and what are the disadvantages?

We were very early adopters of YouTube and are also not entirely clear on whether the current government TOS affect this issue.

As an aside, we are increasingly having historical videos tagged as not “kid-friendly.” Has anyone else experienced that?

Many thanks

On Wednesday, December 8, from 2-3 p.m. ET, join Digital.gov and the Plain Language Community for a presentation on this year's Federal Plain Language Report Card.

Register here!

For a decade, the Center for Plain Language has issued a yearly report card evaluating how well agencies follow the Plain Writing Act. These agencies were judged on organizational compliance and writing quality.

This year, the judges focused on the main Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request page and the main Coronavirus page of 21 executive branch agencies, including all 15 cabinet-level departments.

FTC SEEKS DIGITAL COMMUNICATIONS SPECIALIST WITH DRUPAL EXPERIENCE (GS-12)

The Federal Trade Commission, consistently one of the best places to work in the federal government, seeks a passionate digital communicator (GS-12, annual salary range $87,198-$113,362) with Drupal experience to join its Web and Digital Strategy Team in the Office of Public Affairs. The deadline to apply is Tuesday, December 21, 2021.

As a Digital Communications Specialist, you'll be a key player supporting our dual missions of protecting consumers from fraud and promoting competition in the marketplace. You'll use Drupal to manage and improve content and customer experience in our flagship website, FTC.gov. You'll use your creativity and communications skills to create digital content in various formats and innovate to improve outreach.

At the FTC, you can have a direct, positive impact on people's lives. Our mission is to enforce a variety of federal antitrust and consumer protection laws. Our staff prosecute scammers, go after robocallers, send refund checks to consumers who lose money to fraud schemes, help consumers recover from identity theft, and take action against companies that violate antitrust laws.

The FTC has been in the top five best places to work in the federal government since 2012. In 2020 the Partnership for Public Service ranked the FTC number two as a best place to work from among 25 mid-size federal government agencies. We also ranked number one in effective leadership, empowerment, senior leaders, employee skills-mission match, teamwork, innovation, recognition, supportive leaders (COVID), and employee well-being (COVID).

Due to COVID-19, the FTC is currently in a maximum telework posture through December 31, 2021. In addition, the agency is currently exploring the possibility of having a remote workforce for current and future employees beyond January 2022. Please see the USAJOBS.gov posting for further details.

Join us and make a difference!

Apply on USAJOBS.gov (for all U.S. citizens): <https://www.usajobs.gov/GetJob/ViewDetails/625750700>

Apply on USAJOBS.gov (for current federal employees):

Do you love writing plain language content, crafting engaging digital experiences, and working with an incredible team? We're looking for two communication specialists to join ATF's Web Media Branch and support our critical law enforcement and regulatory mission!

GS-12 Communication Specialist, open through 12/22:

<https://www.usajobs.gov/GetJob/ViewDetails/625973000>

Open to the public

You'll join two writers, two content editors/project managers and three developers who work together every day to improve ATF's digital communications, primarily through our website at ATF.gov and public email lists. Spanish language skills are a bonus but not required.

Typical assignments include writing blog posts and how-to guides, creating new web pages in Drupal, editing content for plain language, proofreading for grammar and AP Style, interviewing users and subject matter experts, posting announcements to the intranet, remediating documents for Section 508 compliance, and analyzing quantitative and qualitative data from users.

ATF is still at maximum telework due to the pandemic. In "normal" times, this position is based at ATF's HQ building in Washington, DC and eligible for telework or AWS (but cannot be fully remote, unfortunately). We're across the street from the NoMa-Gallaudet Red Line station, just one stop from Union Station.

Please pass this along to anyone who might be interested, and let me know if you have any questions!

Hello, Web Content Manager Community:

As a member of the U.S. Web Design System Core Team, I am reaching out to you with a quick ask.

There are lots of people and projects that use USWDS, but the design system isn't always able to connect the dots between this person and that project. As both projects and the design system evolve and grow, we want to be as proactive as possible about understanding what you and your projects need.

To that end, we're launching a short survey to help make these connections between people and USWDS projects. This survey is meant for federal employees who work on federal websites and digital services and will be open through January 7, 2022. Note: This survey is not intended for contractors who work on federal digital projects (for PRA reasons).

So, if you or your project use the design system, we invite you to take what should be a sub-three-minute survey to introduce yourself. It's hopefully just a little thing, but it matters!

Thank you in advance for your time and feedback.

IS it ‘the most wonderful time of the year’? I could use this group’s help spreading the word about this cool GS-13 opportunity on my team– I’m a little worried it might get lost in the midst of the holiday rush. [Then again, maybe there are people who REALLY, REALLY want an excuse to bow out of social events the next 2 weeks. They can tell everyone they have to work on their materials for this job, which closes Dec. 27!]

ABOUT: In the midst of shutdowns, pandemics and everything else, the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office is keepin’ on (as we have for 250+ years) issuing patents and registering trademarks -- and we are even gearing up to bring on new roles 2022! This position is a backfill for someone who is retiring, but it is on a growing team. It’s a really cool hybrid leader, editor, trainer, web & UX-savvy type position. You’d oversee content on uspto.gov, train and coach ~100+ user community to deliver well-written and designed web pages using our CMS (Drupal), and work with a digital strategist and Agile web development team on what to improve or develop next. You are deeply embedded in and supported by various cross-unit teams at the agency like the Web Executive Council, Press team, and Education and Outreach team. There is also a lot of high-level people-wrangling, so diplomacy is a must.

In a single day, you might may brief the highest executives at our 13,000 person agency, review a web page for plain language and adherence to our writing style, troubleshoot a CMS problem and escalate it to our dev team, or lead a planning meeting for our next big project (like our Journeys of Innovation series, or this award-winning site recognizing the 10 Millionth Patent). We’re still on mandatory telework, but our agency is opening up more telework options than ever before, including full-time telework, and this role could be located in any state (though locality pay would apply, of course).

Our current Website Editor in Chief retires at the end of this month, but could answer any questions you might have (Lavonne.shelton@uspto.gov).

Good afternoon,

Has anyone else had trouble of late getting Google to remove "recommended videos" (aka "up next") from their government YouTube channels?

For many years, we successfully sent requests to government@youtube.com, but that email address no longer exists. Inquiries to the new civics-outreach@google.com email address have gone unanswered, and a request to the general YouTube creator/partner support group has also been unsuccessful (so far).

If anyone has another YouTube contact they're willing to share, or knows of another approach worth trying, we'd appreciate the info.

Thanks,

Webinar: Intro to Layout Paragraphs

Layout Paragraphs was designed to empower marketing and editorial teams everywhere, Layout Paragraphs offers a WYSIWYG interface for publishing highly visual, long-form content - no developer needed. In this session, we'll demo the capabilities of Layout Paragraphs, explain how it differs from core's Layout Builder, and show participants how to implement Layout Paragraphs in their own Drupal websites.

In this session, we'll demo the capabilities of Layout Paragraphs, explain how it differs from core's Layout Builder, and show participants how to implement Layout Paragraphs in their own Drupal websites.

Objectives:

- Download and install Layout Paragraphs, along with its dependencies.
- Configure Layout Paragraphs to support the specific types of highly visual, long-form content your organization publishes online.
- Publish dynamic, long-form pages using Layout Paragraphs – without requiring developers or an outside vendor/agency.

Instructor Justin Toupin

Justin Toupin is CEO and founding partner at Aten Design Group. He started the company back in 2000 with a passion for technology and communications, a desire to do meaningful work, and an aspiration to help build a place where people love what they do. Justin speaks about design and development process, working with clients, and the business of running a design company. He is a co-maintainer for several Drupal projects, including OpenAid, the Drupal distribution for marketing non-profit programs.

For those at federal agencies, when do you indicate links to other gov't agencies are external (icons, etc.):

1. When linking to any site other than your own, even if it's owned by your agency? For example, when xxx.fed.gov links to yyy.fed.gov (or even to zzz.gov if it's owned by the same agency)
2. When linking to agencies other than your own? For example, when fed.gov links to 123.gov
3. Not when linking within the federal gov't, but yes when linking to state and local gov't sites
4. Never when linking to any gov't site
5. Something else or a combination of the 4 listed above

Policies have varied and shifted over the decades, so I'm curious what the current thinking is.

Why indicate at all? Do users really care? The context of the link label should indicate where the link leads. I don't think it's a question of security, because users will trust the U.S. government to not link to a bad site. And in any case, users can simply MouseOver a link to check where it's going, if they really want to.

For a looong time, like starting in the early 90s until as recently as 2016 from OMB, it was considered necessary because people often got confused that they were going to a different site, and the federal gov't has more privacy protections than other sites. My wife still gets confused sometimes, actually (and many people don't know how to read URLs, even if they know to mouse over, and that doesn't work in many mobile situations, anyway). There was also a concern that people not blame agencies for problems they encountered on sites we linked to. It's very easy for those of us who live and breathe "web" every day to lose sight of what the average person knows and does.

The page I linked to above from digital.gov says to add external link indicators when linking to non-.gov sites, but here at State, we add them to everything that isn't owned by State. I'm wondering what other agencies do.

But your question is a good one: are they still necessary at all? I'd be curious to know what the most recent usability gurus have to say on the subject, as well as people on this list.

At EPA, we use JavaScript to read the linked URL. If the hostname includes .gov or .mil, we do not add the exit disclaimer tag. At this time, that means the Taiwanese EPA does not get an exit tag (the URL is www.epa.gov.tw). We hope to adjust the logic: if the hostname ends in .gov or .mil, do not add the exit tag.

That means if a state or local web site ends in .gov, it won't get the tag. I guess we trust the dotgov registrar most! We have some exemptions built in, and we could refine our logic and include additional exemptions, but that gets into whack-a-mole.

Of tangential note, we change the language of the word "exit," depending on the language of the page it's on. That's pretty neat. Wish it were so easy to change the language of the rest of the page content.

The page I linked to above from digital.gov says to add external link indicators when linking to non-.gov sites, but here at State, we add them to everything that isn't owned by State. I'm wondering what other agencies do.

But your question is a good one: are they still necessary at all? I'd be curious to know what the most recent usability gurus have to say on the subject, as well as people on this list.

We use our exit icon any time the UI will change. That means even when going to other websites we manage. The "new" website also opens in a new tab. This is to make it clear to the use that, "hey, new menus, colors, etc. coming with this click." It is less about "hey, not a government site" and more about "hey, heads up, everything is going to change."

We also don't link to URL shortener services if we can at all avoid it, for those who DO mouse over links.

I really like the recommendation from the USWDS. They place emphasis on a link being a promise of what's to come and how important it is for that promise to be met. My favorite is including the domain in brackets at the end of the link text. I manage an intranet and we programmatically add an external link icon to any non-.gov URL. Someday we'll make it smarter.

- Notification: We recommend employing a clear, consistent, user-friendly approach for all external links whether government or non-government links (see What you should do, below).
- If you use an external link indicator, use it consistently for all text links. If your project uses an external link indicator (like an icon), use it for all text links across your site. If users learn to associate an external link with the indicator, they will also expect that text links without an indicator are not external links. Icon- or image-only links like social share buttons or logos do not need the same treatment as text links.
- Provide text context for external links. Following a link is a decision. Terse links without context often don't give users enough information to make that decision. Plain, straightforward text can be the best way to communicate to users that a link will take them away from your site. This is useful whether the external link is to a government or a non-government site. When possible, use the content of the link text itself to indicate its destination. In isolation, an external link indicator (like an icon) can be ambiguous. Plain text can help make any link destination more clear.

At EPA, we use JavaScript to read the linked URL. If the hostname includes .gov or .mil, we do not add the exit disclaimer tag. At this time, that means the Taiwanese EPA does not get an exit tag (the URL is www.epa.gov.tw). We hope to adjust the logic: if the hostname ends in .gov or .mil, do not add the exit tag.

That means if a state or local web site ends in .gov, it won't get the tag. I guess we trust the dotgov registrar most! We have some exemptions built in, and we could refine our logic and include additional exemptions, but that gets into whack-a-mole.

Of tangential note, we change the language of the word "exit," depending on the language of the page it's on. That's pretty neat. Wish it were so easy to change the language of the rest of the page content.

For a loooong time, like starting in the early 90s until as recently as 2016 from OMB, it was considered necessary because people often got confused that they were going to a different site, and the federal gov't has more privacy protections than other sites. My wife still gets confused sometimes, actually (and many people don't know how to read URLs, even if they know to mouse over, and that doesn't work in many mobile situations, anyway). There was also a concern that people not blame agencies for problems they encountered on sites we linked to. It's very easy for those of us who live and breathe "web" every day to lose sight of what the average person knows and does.

The page I linked to above from digital.gov says to add external link indicators when linking to non-.gov sites, but here at State, we add them to everything that isn't owned by State. I'm wondering what other agencies do.

But your question is a good one: are they still necessary at all? I'd be curious to know what the most recent usability gurus have to say on the subject, as well as people on this list.

Why indicate at all? Do users really care? The context of the link label should indicate where the link leads. I don't think it's a question of security, because users will trust the U.S. government to not link to a bad site. And in any case, users can simply MouseOver a link to check where it's going, if they really want to.

I've heard a lot of people point to the exit page used here at the IRS, as a warning you're leaving the IRS intranet, yet no one reads it. It references protecting your own personal information, because you're leaving the firewalled internal network.

I have seen many (including this USWDS site) claim there is a requirement to identify if a link goes to a non-governmental site. I would like to see evidence of that requirement, if anyone can provide it. I have seen studies that point to the additional "click" required being more bothersome for users, than confusion of going to a different site. While I'm not necessarily advocating against using warnings, I do believe that it is very likely it's an effort of polishing brass in a janitor's closet.

Does anyone have information on?:

- An authoritative mandate to include external warnings, and guidance on how to meet the requirement
- Relatively recent studies showing exit warnings prevent problems with a significant user population

I also wonder how many governmental sites implement a non-requirement, at the detriment of accessibility (section 508).

Thank you,
 David Thompson

We use a Drupal module in combination with the list of federal domains at <https://home.dotgov.gov/data/> to determine when a link is to a non-federal government site and then present a dialog box and disclaimer.

Subject: [EXTERNAL] [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] External links when linking to other federal sites

For those at federal agencies, when do you indicate links to other gov't agencies are external (icons, etc.):

1. When linking to any site other than your own, even if it's owned by your agency? For example, when xxx.fed.gov links to yyy.fed.gov (or even to zzz.gov if it's owned by the same agency)
2. When linking to agencies other than your own? For example, when fed.gov links to 123.gov
3. Not when linking within the federal gov't, but yes when linking to state and local gov't sites
4. Never when linking to any gov't site
5. Something else or a combination of the 4 listed above

Policies have varied and shifted over the decades, so I'm curious what the current thinking is.

Thanks!

Good morning! On the USWDS page that Jessica shared it lists the OMB requirement:

What you must do

- Clearly identify external links. [OMB's Policies for Federal Agency Public Websites and Digital Services \[PDF, 1.2 MB\]](#) states that agencies "must clearly identify external links from their websites" and that they "should choose the best approach to identify external links to users in a way that minimizes the impact on the usability of their websites and digital services."
- Provide required notification for non-federal external links. [OMB's Policies for Federal Agency Public Websites and Digital Services \[PDF, 1.2 MB\]](#) states that you "must clearly state that the content of external links to non-federal agency websites is not endorsed by the federal government."

This requirement has two aspects:

- Notification: We recommend employing a clear, consistent, user-friendly approach for all external links whether government or non-government links (see What you should do, below).
- Non-endorsement: We recommend adding language to a policy and notices page on your site to explain to users that the agency does not endorse the information on any linked non-federal site. See, for example, USA.gov's linking policy.

Check with your [Federal Web Council representative \[digital.gov\]](#) and General Counsel regarding agency requirements for this endorsement language and notification approach.

I've heard a lot of people point to the exit page used here at the IRS, as a warning you're leaving the IRS intranet, yet no one reads it. It references protecting your own personal information, because you're leaving the firewalled internal network.

I have seen many (including this USWDS site) claim there is a requirement to identify if a link goes to a non-governmental site. I would like to see evidence of that requirement, if anyone can provide it. I have seen studies that point to the additional "click" required being more bothersome for users, than confusion of going to a different site. While I'm not necessarily advocating against using warnings, I do believe that it is very likely it's an effort of polishing brass in a janitor's closet.

Does anyone have information on?:

- An authoritative mandate to include external warnings, and guidance on how to meet the requirement
- Relatively recent studies showing exit warnings prevent problems with a significant user population

I also wonder how many governmental sites implement a non-requirement, at the detriment of accessibility (section 508).

Thank you,

Subject: RE: External links when linking to other federal sites

I really like the recommendation from the USWDS. They place emphasis on a link being a promise of what's to come and how important it is for that promise to be met. My favorite is including the domain in brackets at the end of the link text. I manage an intranet and we programmatically add an external link icon to any non-.gov URL. Someday we'll make it smarter.

- Notification: We recommend employing a clear, consistent, user-friendly approach for all external links whether government or non-government links (see What you should do, below).
- If you use an external link indicator, use it consistently for all text links. If your project uses an external link indicator (like an icon), use it for all text links across your site. If users learn to associate an external link with the indicator, they will also expect that text links without an indicator are not external links. Icon- or image-only links like social share buttons or logos do not need the same treatment as text links.
- Provide text context for external links. Following a link is a decision. Terse links without context often don't give users enough information to make that decision. Plain, straightforward text can be the best way to communicate to users that a link will take them away from your site. This is useful whether the external link is to a government or a non-government site. When possible, use the content of the link text itself to indicate its destination. In isolation, an external link indicator (like an icon) can be ambiguous. Plain text can help make any link destination more clear.

At EPA, we use JavaScript to read the linked URL. If the hostname includes .gov or .mil, we do not add the exit disclaimer tag. At this time, that means the Taiwanese EPA does not get an exit tag (the URL is www.epa.gov.tw). We hope to adjust the logic: if the hostname ends in .gov or .mil, do not add the exit tag.

That means if a state or local web site ends in .gov, it won't get the tag. I guess we trust the dotgov registrar most! We have some exemptions built in, and we could refine our logic and include additional exemptions, but that gets into whack-a-mole.

Of tangential note, we change the language of the word "exit," depending on the language of the page it's on. That's pretty neat. Wish it were so easy to change the language of the rest of the page content.

For a loooong time, like starting in the early 90s until as recently as 2016 from OMB, it was considered necessary because people often got confused that they were going to a different site, and the federal gov't has more privacy protections than other sites. My wife still gets confused sometimes, actually (and many people don't know how to read URLs, even if they know to mouse over, and that doesn't work in many mobile situations, anyway). There was also a concern that people not blame agencies for problems they encountered on sites we linked to. It's very easy for those of us who live and breathe "web" every day to lose sight of what the average person knows and does.

The page I linked to above from digital.gov says to add external link indicators when linking to non-.gov sites, but here at State, we add them to everything that isn't owned by State. I'm wondering what other agencies do.

But your question is a good one: are they still necessary at all? I'd be curious to know what the most recent usability gurus have to say on the subject, as well as people on this list.

Why indicate at all? Do users really care? The context of the link label should indicate where the link leads. I don't think it's a question of security, because users will trust the U.S. government to not link to a bad site. And in any case, users can simply MouseOver a link to check where it's going, if they really want to.

For a loooong time, like starting in the early 90s until as recently as 2016 from OMB, it was considered necessary because people often got confused that they were going to a different site, and the federal gov't has more privacy protections than other sites. My wife still gets confused sometimes, actually (and many people don't know how to read URLs, even if they know to mouse over, and that doesn't work in many mobile situations, anyway). There was also a concern that people not blame agencies for problems they encountered on sites we linked to. It's very easy for those of us who live and breathe "web" every day to lose sight of what the average person knows and does.

The page I linked to above from digital.gov says to add external link indicators when linking to non-.gov sites, but here at State, we add them to everything that isn't owned by State. I'm wondering what other agencies do.

But your question is a good one: are they still necessary at all? I'd be curious to know what the most recent usability gurus have to say on the subject, as well as people on this list.

Why indicate at all? Do users really care? The context of the link label should indicate where the link leads. I don't think it's a question of security, because users will trust the U.S. government to not link to a bad site. And in any case, users can simply MouseOver a link to check where it's going, if they really want to.

At U.S. Energy Information Administration we use an icon indicator to identify all external links, even to other U.S. government sites. Even though it doesn't open a new tab/window, customers (users) still benefit from the excellent reasons Cheryl gave below. Also, our exposure to customer feedback has shown that they value knowing when a link will take them to another site. To us it just makes sense to try to provide what the customers tell us they want, particularly if it doesn't inconvenience those customers who are silent about the matter.

We use our exit icon any time the UI will change. That means even when going to other websites we manage. The "new" website also opens in a new tab. This is to make it clear to the use that, "hey, new menus, colors, etc. coming with this click." It is less about, "hey, not a government site" and more about "hey, heads up, everything is going to change."

We also don't link to URL shortener services if we can at all avoid it, for those who DO mouse over links.

At EPA, we use JavaScript to read the linked URL. If the hostname includes .gov or .mil, we do not add the exit disclaimer tag. At this time, that means the Taiwanese EPA does not get an exit tag (the URL is www.epa.gov.tw). We hope to adjust the logic: if the hostname ends in .gov or .mil, do not add the exit tag.

That means if a state or local web site ends in .gov, it won't get the tag. I guess we trust the dotgov registrar most! We have some exemptions built in, and we could refine our logic and include additional exemptions, but that gets into whack-a-mole.

Of tangential note, we change the language of the word "exit," depending on the language of the page it's on. That's pretty neat. Wish it were so easy to change the language of the rest of the page content.

There are two scenarios that should be addressed differently (IMO):

1. User browsing: Visual indicators are great ways to approach the issue when a user is simply browsing your site. The user generally doesn't need a pop up indicator.
2. User logged into an account: When a user is logged into a gov site account and clicking on the link will change their context, the user should receive a popup notification with an option either remain on site or proceed to the external link. These links should also have the visual external link indicator. Examples of a user gov accounts might be: an advisory committee member, eFOIA, SSN account, patent application account, etc.

We are one government and there should be consistency across the gov sites for a better user experience.

At EPA, we use JavaScript to read the linked URL. If the hostname includes .gov or .mil, we do not add the exit disclaimer tag. At this time, that means the Taiwanese EPA does not get an exit tag (the URL is www.epa.gov.tw). We hope to adjust the logic: if the hostname *ends* in .gov or .mil, do not add the exit tag.

That means if a state or local web site ends in .gov, it won't get the tag. I guess we trust the dotgov registrar most! We have some exemptions built in, and we could refine our logic and include additional exemptions, but that gets into whack-a-mole.

Of tangential note, we change the language of the word “exit,” depending on the language of the page it's on. That's another neat. Wish it were so easy to change the language of the rest of the page content.

For a loooong time, like starting in the early 90s until as recently as 2016 from OMB, it was considered necessary because people often got confused that they were going to a different site, and the federal gov't has more privacy protections than other sites. My wife still gets confused sometimes, actually (and many people don't know how to read URLs, even if they know to mouse over, and that doesn't work in many mobile situations, anyway). There was also a concern that people not blame agencies for problems they encountered on sites we linked to. It's very easy for those of us who live and breathe "web" every day to lose sight of what the average person knows and does.

The page I linked to above from digital.gov says to add external link indicators when linking to non-.gov sites, but here at State, we add them to everything that isn't owned by State. I'm wondering what other agencies do.

But your question is a good one: are they still necessary at all? I'd be curious to know what the most recent usability gurus have to say on the subject, as well as people on this list.

Why indicate at all? Do users really care? The context of the link label should indicate where the link leads. I don't think it's a question of security, because users will trust the U.S. government to not link to a bad site.

One use case that is important to consider is when/where you have links to internal apps that are cross-linked on the webpage. Many large agencies may coral these apps into a one-stop-shop page where people can go to “do the work” or find the transaction – And integration of these functionalities often is on other servers and therefore requires other URLs.

An example is the citizen apps page at DHS.gov - <https://www.dhs.gov/dhs-citizen-application-directory>

It is not atypical for these apps to garner user feedback on things like forgotten passwords, or technical glitches. When this happens the enterprise webmaster often gets the brunt of the feedback from unhappy citizens who can't do what they came to your website to do, not understanding that the app actually belongs to another internal business unit.

So figuring out how to educate the user/citizen to know where to take their complaints and get service is a key to sanity. I'm not sure if anyone has slayed this dragon yet, but notice that you have left the main site could cut down on errant complaints to the central web team.

I've heard a lot of people point to the exit page used here at the IRS, as a warning you're leaving the IRS intranet, yet no one reads it. It references protecting your own personal information, because you're leaving the firewalled internal network.

I have seen many (including this USWDS site) claim there is a requirement to identify if a link goes to a non-governmental site. I would like to see evidence of that requirement, if anyone can provide it. I have seen studies that point to the additional “click” required being more bothersome for users, than confusion of going to a different site. While I'm not necessarily advocating against using warnings, I do believe that it is very likely it's an effort of polishing brass in a janitor's closet.

Does anyone have information on?

Does anyone have information on?:

- An authoritative mandate to include external warnings, and guidance on how to meet the requirement
- Relatively recent studies showing exit warnings prevent problems with a significant user population

I also wonder how many governmental sites implement a non-requirement, at the detriment of accessibility (section 508).

Subject: RE: External links when linking to other federal sites

I really like the recommendation from the USWDS. They place emphasis on a link being a promise of what's to come and how important it is for that promise to be met. My favorite is including the domain in brackets at the end of the link text. I manage an intranet and we programmatically add an external link icon to any non-.gov URL. Someday we'll make it smarter.

- Notification: We recommend employing a clear, consistent, user-friendly approach for all external links whether government or non-government links (see What you should do, below).
- If you use an external link indicator, use it consistently for all text links. If your project uses an external link indicator (like an icon), use it for all text links across your site. If users learn to associate an external link with the indicator, they will also expect that text links without an indicator are not external links. Icon- or image-only links like social share buttons or logos do not need the same treatment as text links.
- Provide text context for external links. Following a link is a decision. Terse links without context often don't give users enough information to make that decision. Plain, straightforward text can be the best way to communicate to users that a link will take them away from your site. This is useful whether the external link is to a government or a non-government site. When possible, use the content of the link text itself to indicate its destination. In isolation, an external link indicator (like an icon) can be ambiguous. Plain text can help make any link destination more clear.

*As I set my out-of-office message with care,
And hope the holiday click-bait inside will ensnare,
The valiant federal employee still at work at their desk.
It made a question stick in my mind like a pest:
– what are other agencies doing in terms of content over the holidays?*

Feel free to share any fun out-of-office messages, holiday social posts, or heart-warming agency videos on this thread!

Inspired by others MUCH more creative than I, I've wrote a new out-of-office message this year:

I'll be on leave... Looking for something work-related, yet seasonally appropriate?

- Read about the invention of the Flexible Flyer sled: <https://www.uspto.gov/learning-and-resources/journeys-innovation/historical-stories/sled-steers>

NASA's "video-card" has strong 1960s animated vibes, with some cute/creepy chuckling space vehicles: <https://www.digitaltrends.com/news/spot-the-space-missions-in-nasas-animated-holiday-card/>

USPTO's European counterpart, the European Patent Office -- who consistently CRUSHES it with their videos -- has a truly heart-warming video that does many things, including working in the IP-angle [harder than you think, people!]and making smart decisions to minimize dialog and optimize for a multilingual audience: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=O7tOy7BYuFg>

The State of Iowa does not allow agencies to load video files directly to their agency websites and recommends all videos be posted to their agency YouTube channel or the State of Iowa YouTube Channel.

The Iowa Department of Cultural Affairs manages the National History Day competition for Iowa and wants to post winning videos but has run into an issue with YouTube as the student's video contains copyrighted content and YouTube will not allow the video to be posted. It's a student video on their google drive that is a part of an educational program.

Any suggestions on other video hosting platforms or how to address this issue?

Not a lawyer, nor have I played one on TV or stayed at a Motel-6, but ... wondering if the student is the owner of the copyrighted material?

If the student owns the protected creative they should be able to provide permission to use on YouTube per your agency policy. Otherwise, the student should seek permission ($?) from the copyright owner, a legal determination under the provisions of "fair use," or substitute copyrighted materials for those available in YouTube's Audio Library or that are in the public domain.

Not a copyright expert, but I work at an IP agency...

It would be a very bad look for our agency to post videos which infringe on someone's intellectual property. So here's what we do:

In the past for user-generated content like you describe, we have a tip sheet for participants who are sharing their work in order to win a contest. It explains some of the IP concerns (not using copyright music if you don't have the rights etc.) and then when they submit for consideration to us, we make them attest that this is their work and they own the appropriate copyrights.

This worked pretty well, both in terms of educating students about IP, showing them alternatives to avoid common pitfalls, and making sure what we receive doesn't get flagged by Youtube.

That said, Youtube has a very AGGRESSIVE algorithm for flagging copyright claims. They just released their first transparency report, and something like 2.2 million of the claims were successfully disputed this past year. The student's video may very well be using a copy-written piece of music – but from experience at my agency, I know we have the proper documentation and licensing for all our sound and Youtube regularly flags our videos, causing us to use the 'dispute' feature of Youtube. Every time, the copyright claim as been successfully contested and released.

We use both licensed music, and short clips from other works in an educational videos (which our attorneys agreed fell under fair use). I dispute every Youtube claim on principle, because we are in the right, and have the time and fortitude (aka IP attorneys on staff if it comes to it) to dispute -- and I know not every creator does.

So – educate everyone you can about copyright [Michael's suggestions are good ones!], but if your agency gets flagged for something you upload, and you know you are in the right – don't be nervous to contest the claim either.

Hope that helps!

If the student owns the protected creative they should be able to provide permission to use on YouTube per your agency policy. Otherwise, the student should seek permission ($?) from the copyright owner, a legal determination under the provisions of "fair use," or substitute copyrighted materials for those available in YouTube's Audio Library or that are in the public domain.

The Iowa Department of Cultural Affairs manages the National History Day competition for Iowa and wants to post winning videos but has run into an issue with YouTube as the student's video contains copyrighted content and YouTube will not allow the video to be posted. It's a student video on their google drive that is a part of an educational program.

Any suggestions on other video hosting platforms or how to address this issue?

I'm weighing in as a small-time content manager for a small-time state agency in West Virginia (arguably a small-time state), and Ms. Larrimore's excellent points about YouTube and its algorithms underscore why we don't have anything to do with YouTube. We have neither time nor money nor attorneys on retainer here to fight for what we already own or license.

When we set up a YouTube channel perhaps eight or 10 years ago, we found that YouTube was serving up "recommended" content alongside ours that we didn't want to be associated with. We looked for alternatives, and we've found that Vimeo meets all our needs and gives us full control at a reasonable annual cost ($200-300 as I recall, though it goes higher if the audience is huge). Playback quality is excellent, optimized on the fly regardless of platform or device. Final Cut Pro and some other editors can be configured to upload finished in-house projects automatically to our Vimeo account, where we have significant control of metadata and presentation, and there's no third party host looking over our shoulder.

It works great for us. Your mileage may vary.

Hi Jeff,

I'm glad you're able to use Vimeo. Some of our Fed shops have been constrained by Vimeo's slight lack of cooperation in signing-off on certain security considerations on an agency-by-agency or contract-by-contract basis.

Note that I'm not saying their position is unreasonable, just that it's not working for some of us.

The particular reg isn't coming to mind, but what we need is assurance that none of our data will cross/encounter the hardware or services of certain companies (Huawei and friends? Yep. Them.) while in Vimeo – and we're not getting it in the way we'd like.

Good luck w/your videos!

Returning to an old (March) conversation – now that creating links to text fragments is a standard Chromium feature (and the resultant links are apparently non-harmful to Firefox users), is anyone else making regular use of the feature? Is it something you advise your folks to embrace? Avoid?

This is just curiosity on my part. No crisis here!

I expect my teammates to know and understand the feature and use it where they think it's appropriate (esp. in social media).

I neglected to mention that the browser will land such that the highlighted text is visible. The # following the main link text is a hint of this functionality – like deep-linking on a page to a marked section.

It's not perfect. Some links just don't seem to want to work. Google gives a hint to this in the description of their text fragment link creator plug-in . Also, I can't test the plug-in, as it's blocked by default. One day!

Hi (b) (6)

Sure thing. If you Google “prevented planting” in Chrome, you might get a snippet response at the top of your results. If you do, clicking through will show a page on farmers.gov with highlighted text. I mention this, because this means that Google is using its own feature and it's (at least somewhat) working.

Or you can just try this link: <https://www.farmers.gov/connect/blog/conservation/healthy-grass-equals-profitable-ranches#:~:text=deeded%20and%20leased,meet%20the%20prairie.>

I'm not sure what Outlook will do to it, so you might need to copy/paste the text.

Remember: Chrome, for now. Maybe Edge (thanks, Chromium!), not Safari.

This is just curiosity on my part. No crisis here!

I expect my teammates to know and understand the feature and use it where they think it's appropriate (esp. in social media).
