Two large trees lost limbs or portions of their trunk and numerous smaller branches were broken . The resident reported seeing a mass of wind and clouds upstream from this location but not a funnel. There was no damage observed in the crops upstream of the location, at least from what could be seen from the ground. There was debris in the field north of the farm, but no other damage was visible until the tornado entered Manhattan near the park. Damage in Manhattan consisted of numerous snapped branches of various sizes and at least two large, over one foot diameter, trunks snapped. Damage in the park was about 100 yards wide. Several buildings in town received just minor damage, but the post office lost a portion of its roof covering and a building next door had broken windows as well as shingle and roof damage . The tornado dissipated near Prairie Street as it exited downtown. No damage was observed in the tree line north of Prairie Street.
